Conference Set Here On Residence Halls

By STEVE KNOWLTON
of The Daily Tar Heel Staff

Fifteen colleges and universities will participate in a conference on residence colleges here Oct. 13 and 14.

"We want to inform the faculty of the residential college concept and its virtues," said Dr. Sam Hill, chairman of the Chancellor's Advisory Committee on Residence Colleges, the group responsible for the conference.

Only fifteen UNC students will attend the two-day meet as opposed to almost 50 faculty and administrators. "We think the students are already ahead of the faculty on this matter," Hill said. "We need the faculty and administrators to catch up."

In addition to the 40 visiting faculty and administrators from seven North Carolina schools and eight-out-of-state ones, one student representative from each institution will attend.

The host university will be represented by 12 administrators, 25 faculty members, 10 students and the 14-member Chancellor's Advisory Committee — consisting of five students, six faculty members and three administrators.

The group will meet in the Voyager Inn in Durham instead of the Quail Roost, the usual place for such conferences, because of the large number attending.

"We wanted to have a good representation of colleges and universities in varying stages of development," said Dean of Student Affairs C. O. Cathey, "but we wanted to keep it as small as possible to allow the greatest interplay of discussion."

The residence colleges — intended to humanize the learning experience — have gone about as far as they can without additional information from some type of discussion outside the Carolina campus, Hill said.

After three years of the concept, "we've reached the point where we felt we had enough experience to identify relevant questions and too little experience to proceed further without additional information and insight," he said.

North Carolina institutions attending the conference will be: UNC-G, UNC-C, North Carolina State University, Duke University, Wake Forest College, East Carolina University, and North Carolina College.

Neighboring state universities are the Universities of Virginia, Georgia, South Carolina and West Virginia.

Other universities are: the University of Massachusetts — the site of the Amherst Conference attended by U-Mass and UNC last fall — Michigan State University — the home of James Morrill College, where one of the nation's most highly developed residence college systems is in effect — Florida State University and University of Kentucky.

The three guest speakers for the conference are "the best three men in the country to speak on this subject," both Dean Cathey and Dr. Hill concurred.

They are:
Dana Farnsworth, M.D. — Director of the Harvard University Health Service. "He is not just concerned with mental health," Hill said. "He's a top man in the whole

Scholastic Award Is Given DU's

Delta Upsilon Fraternity has won the Highest Scholastic Average Award for the year 1966-67 with an overall average of 2.598.

Runners-up were Zeta Beta Tau with a 2.538 and Phi Delta Theta with a 2.532. All averages were based on the grades of all active brothers and active pledges for the fall and spring semesters.

The award for the biggest improvement went to the Chi Phi house, which boosted its average from 2.146 in the fall to 2.322 in the spring semester. The all-fraternity average was 2.318.

The Dean of the University School of Social Work Thursday defended the hiring of Durham Negro organizer Howard Fuller, but acknowledged that Fuller "is a controversial figure."

Dean C. Wilson Anderson said he had no comment on Gov. Dan K. Moore's statement Wednesday in which the chairman of the University trustees called the hiring of Fuller "a serious mistake."

Fuller, who led a number of Negro demonstrations and rallies in Durham during the summer was hired by the University as a lecturer shortly before the beginning of the present semester.

Fuller, who is still connected with the North Carolina Fund in Durham, was suspended from his Office of Economic Opportunity salary following one of these demonstrations during which garbage cans were overturned, some cars stoned and several plate glass store windows smashed.

Anderson said he was fully convinced that Fuller is not an advocate of violence.

Fuller himself spoke out against racial violence on a number of occasions, and on July 20th, during a protest march, Fuller calmed down demonstrators after a group of whites had hurled a bottle at them.

Anderson said Thursday that Fuller had been serving as a guest lecturer for three full-time professors for the past year.

He said Fuller had first been considered for employment as an instructor "several months ago."

Anderson said that Fuller, who has a master's degree in social work from Western Reserve University, followed the usual procedure in being screened by a faculty hiring committee and submitted the required references.

The dean of the School of Social Work said the instructor's performance in the past had been "quite satisfactory."

Anderson said he had not been contacted by any university officials following the Governor's statement, which was released through his news secretary.

Anderson said that the professors for whom Fuller had lectured last year had been "very pleased" by his work. Fuller guest lectured in classes on community organization, social work and health problems.

He is now teaching one section of 20 students on community organization and is receiving a salary of $1,500 for the semester.

Anderson said it had been pointed out to him on many occasions that Fuller is a controversial figure. "I would agree to that, but I would defend his qualifications to teach this particular course sequence," Anderson said.

Chancellor J. Carlyle Sitterson and other University officials had no comment. President William C. Friday and Vice President for University Relations Fred Weaver were both out of town and unavailable for comment on the governor's remarks.

Fuller's Training In Social Work

By Mike McGowan
of The Daily Tar Heel Staff

Howard Fuller has had several years' experience in social work.

Fuller attended Carroll College in Wisconsin. While there, he was active in student government and was an all-conference basketball player.

Minor in history and secondary education, Fuller received a B.S. in sociology.

At Western Reserve University he majored in community organization.

Immediately after he left Cleveland, he was hired as an employment and guidance specialist by the Chicago Urban League. He stayed there for a year.

In 1965 he left Chicago for Durham's Operation Breakthrough. There he served as neighborhood center coordinator until February 1966. At that time he became coordinator for the entire community project, which at the time included three neighborhood groups.

The North Carolina Fund hired Fuller in 1967, to direct their community action technician program. His duties included organization and training of personnel until April. He then transferred his attention to supervising field work if the program.

In addition to his duties with the N.C. Fund, Fuller has been guest lecturer at the UNC School of Social Work for the past year. He has also helped train field workers for the school. Fuller, however, did not receive compensation for the latter activities.

This year he was one of 18 new faculty members at the School of Social Work here. As such he teaches only one section of about 20 students and receives $1,500 per semester.

Senator Ervin Says South 'Whipping Boy'

WASHINGTON — Sen. Sam J. Ervin, Jr., D-N.C., Thursday charged the administration with making the South "a whipping boy" in proposing legislation which would give added federal protection to persons engaged in civil rights activities.

"It has been politically profitable for some years to make a whipping boy of the South," Ervin said. "And this is just one more example."

Neither Atty. Gen. Ramsey Clark nor John Dear, head of the civil rights section, agreed with Ervin's charge.

But neither could immediately provide Ervin with an example of where the proposed law would be used outside the South.

Reds Sentence American

BUDAPEST, Hungary — A Budapest court Thursday sentenced American student Richard F. Goos to four months in prison for trying to smuggle his East German girl friend across the Hungarian-Yugoslav border.

A Hungarian News Agency report said Goos, 23, of Hamilton, Ohio, was convicted by the court on charges of having prepared "an illegal crossing of the Hungarian border."

Goos was arrested two months ago. The agency said he planned to smuggle his girl friend across the border and to the west to marry her.

The Budapest court ruled that the two months Goos has already spent in jail should be deducted from his sentence.

Loflin To Speak At Duke Teach-In On Vietnam War

By WAYNE HURDER
of The Daily Tar Heel Staff

A Vietnam War Teach-in, sponsored by the Duke YM-YWCA, the North Carolina College student government and the Durham Peace Committee, will be held at Page Auditorium at Duke Tuesday at 8 p.m.

Among the scheduled speakers is Thomas F. Loflin, a Morehead Fellow at UNC

Pi Kappas To Build New House

By RICK GRAY
of The Daily Tar Heel Staff

The University chapter of Pi Kappa Phi, presently located on West Cameron Avenue, has broken ground for a new $130,000 house near Finley Golf Course, according to Dr. Frederick Krantz, house president.

The new building will be three stories high and will house 32 persons, with the top two floors used as sleeping quarters. The first floor will include the social facilities of the house.

The plan for the new house was conceived about five years ago, and the first architectural plans were completed in January. The land has been cleared and the foundation is expected to be laid shortly.

If construction goes according to schedule, the chapter will be able to take up occupancy at the beginning of the second semester, Williams said.

Kappa Council, Inc., raised funds by selling promissory notes and securing a twenty-

Law School who recently wrote a controversial article for Avant Garde Magazine about alleged slayings of Vietnamese civilians by U.S. helicopter pilots.

Other scheduled speakers are Dr. John S. Curtiss, a James B. Duke professor of history and a specialist in Russian history, Dr. Robert I. Crane, Duke history professor and a Southeast Asia expert, and Dr. Donald S. Gillin, specialist in modern Chinese history at Duke.

The executive committee of the Carolina Political Union hopes to become a co-sponsor of the program, according to David Kiel, president of the CPU. The matter will be decided at the organization's meeting Sunday night.

The CPU will attempt to provide transportation to persons from UNC wanting to attend. Anyone interested should contact Eric Clay, at 933-4142.

The U.S. State Department has indicated an interest in sending a speaker but has not said so definitely yet, according to Dr. Frederick Krantz, a co-ordinator of the program.

Invitations have also been sent to North Carolina Representatives Nick Gallianakis and James Gardner and to Jesse Helms of television station WRAL in Raleigh. They have not replied.

Loflin said his speech would be "in the context of some of the more unpleasant things that I observed in Vietnam," where he served for several months in the Army.

He said he wouldn't take any definite stand on the present policy in his talk, but would simply point out his experiences, "which would lead anyone to question the present policy."

"I hope the audience can form its own opinion," he added.

The organizers of the teach-in have tried to get representatives from the two extreme positions on the war and the middle, according to Loflin.

Each speaker will make an opening talk of several minutes duration and then he will be subjected to inquiries by the audience.

"The main emphasis is going to be on questioning the speaker," Loflin said.

"I tried to observe the war impartially," Loflin commented. "I don't plan to pull any punches. I saw some things which made me question the war."

Loflin, in his magazine article, wrote that he heard helicopter pilots brag about machine-gunning civilians for no apparent reason.

Blue granite rock has ended UNC's chances for a new student union by this spring but a new library and book exchange should be ready by the first of June.

"I guess we blasted through five feet of the rock," said construction project manager George Mock. "It slowed us up for about two month's work."

As it stands now, the student union is scheduled for an August completion.

"We did not hit any rock on the other buildings," said Mock from his air-conditioned trailer office. "It was almost as if we hit a single boulder."

Mock doesn't expect any future difficulties in the construction work unless cold weather hits early. "We can't pour concrete when it's cold," he said, "so we're trying to get

SRL Meets On Sunday

The Student Religious Liberals, a relatively new campus group, will hold its first meeting of the year Sunday night at 7:30 in Roland Parker Lounge No. 3.

The organization was created last fall primarily as a forum for discussion in the fields of religion, psychiatry and philosophy. Meetings usually feature a speaker.

The Sunday program will be a panel discussion by Dr. William Hollister and John Riley on the "liberal religion" and the purposes of SRL.

Blue Granite—Whoa!

The buildings closed in order to be able to work inside.

The new buildings are being built at a cost of about $3,350,000. The library will cost $990,000; the book exchange about $1.5 million. A fourth building to house the heating and air-conditioning units will cost $180,000.

"The small mechanical building will be right behind Lenoir Hall," pointed out Mock. "It will be hidden by a brick retaining wall so students won't be able to see it."

Mock said there are approximately 200-300 men working on the buildings now, but that number will swell as soon as the men can move inside.

"As soon as we get the walls up and more subcontractors arrive we'll have a small army here," he laughed. All the buildings will be similar in exterior appearance, said Mock. "The first floor will be glass," he said, "with pre-cast stone panels to the roof."

"There will be a total of about 240,000 square feet of floor space in the three buildings," he continued. He broke it down to 100,000 square feet for the student union; 90,000 for the library and about 50,000 for the book exchange.

"The library will be completely carpeted and have acoustical, luminous ceilings," he said. "The book exchange will have tiled floors while in the student union there will be a hardwood floor in the main hall and also carpets and terrazzo tile."

Howard Henry, director of Graham Memorial, is anxious to move into the new quarters. "No great changes have been planned for GM," he said. "It will just be a new home for the present organization."

Present plans call for the Alumni Association and the new student admissions offices to be moved to the present GM building. The new library will be primarily for undergraduate students.

SP Meeting Hosts Rose

The Student Party will hold its second meeting of the year Sunday night at 7:30 in Room 111 Murphey Hall. Sharon Rose, chairman of the Women's Residence Council will speak on the issue of the rules governing the life of campus coeds.

The party plans a series of nine weekly meetings in an effort to present the issues of the campus to the party members. Included in the series will be speeches on student stress, educational reform and the residence college system.

SHARON DERRICK was disappointed again — first we lost to State and then last night's pep rally was rained out. All we can do is hope for better luck Saturday when UNC plays South Carolina.
