Crackdown— Bad Checks

By WAYNE HURDER

of The Daily Tar Heel Staff

The Student Credit Committee of Student Government is starting a new crackdown on students who pass bad checks.

The committee will begin sending to Chapel Hill merchants a list of students who pass two bad checks or more each week, according to Glenn Datnoff, committee chairman, so they can decide whose checks are safe to cash.

Under the new policy, merchants will give the committee the names of students who pass bad checks.

The committee, besides sending out a list, will contact each bad check passer and give him 48 hours to do something about the check, Datnoff says.

After that, the problem is handed back to the merchant, who may turn the bad check over to a justice of the peace, who is empowered by law to collect on bad checks.

When a justice of the peace collects on a bad check, he gets a nine dollar legal fee from the passer and the bad check goes on the person's credit rating.

The new policy is designed to help the student by cutting down on the number of checks turned over to the justice of the peace and by keeping the bad checks off a student's credit rating, Datnoff said.

Datnoff is working with the Attorney General's staff to see if the passing of a certain amount of bad checks can be made a Campus or Honor Code offense.

Y Budget Cut In Half

Student Contributions Short of Expectations

By KAREN FREEMAN

of The Daily Tar Heel Staff

A decrease in student monetary support is making the YMCA-YWCA operate on a budget only a little more than half of the Y's most pessimistic projected budget for this year.

The Y hoped to receive $6,000 in student contributions this year, but estimated that it would be able to maintain its programs on $3,000.

So far, less than $1,600 has been provided by students. Last year's contributions approached $6,000.

The sharp reduction is the result of the Y's not being able to have its pledge card on the matriculation form this year, it is thought.

Since the administrative costs of the Y remain constant and will have to be met, the Y will have to reduce its spending on programs.

Y-sponsored programs range from the International Bazaar (to be held this weekend) to working with retarded children at the Murdoch Center, helping Phil Clay's Carolina Talent Search by preparing a brochure, and sponsoring programs such as the Symposium on Poverty.

Most of these Y service programs are run with volunteer help and only require a little over $600 to support, but this figure will have to be further reduced if more income is not forthcoming.

A Y spokesman estimated that speaker programs, aid to foreign students, and community service programs will be most seriously affected by the lack of funds.

13 Sociologists From Carolina Denounce War

By WAYNE HURDER

of The Daily Tar Heel Staff

Thirteen UNC sociologists are among 1,300 members of the American Sociological Association who have sent a letter to President Lyndon Johnson and Congress protesting the war in Vietnam.

Two of these, Gerhard Lenski and Hubert Blalock, both professors of sociology here, are among 15 sponsors of the letter signed by sociologists in the United States, Australia, Canada, England and Japan.

The 1,300 signers come from an Association membership of around 4,000, according to Lenski. The letter condemns both the conduct of the war and the "diversion of resources from the attempt to deal with our most serious social problems."

The letter calls for an end to the bombing of North Vietnam, a "vigorous and genuine attempt to seek negotiations for peace," and a withdrawal of American troops from Vietnam.

UNC leads other North Carolina schools in the number of signers. Duke is next with six, East Carolina University has three, Guilford College has two, and N.C. State has one.

A total of 33 persons from North Carolina signed.

Some of the noted signers of the letter are authors David Riesman, also a sponsor of the letter, William F. Whyte, Alex Inkeles, Pitirim Sorokin, Robert K. Merton, and Amitai Etzioni.

Leon Bramson of Swarthmore College and Peter Rose of Smith College first conceived of the idea, according to Lenski, and after the convention they contacted Lenski and Blalock about being sponsors.

Nine of the UNC signers are in the Department of Sociology here. Of the other four, one is in the School of Business Administration, another in the School of Psychiatry, a third in the Department of Anthropology, and a fourth is a retired member of the Sociology Department.

The letter criticizes the diversion of resources from domestic problems, because, the sociologists say, these problems "will not yield to fragmentary token efforts but must be the focus of massive concerted action."

The signers say that continue bombing cannot succeed in forcing peace negotiations" and they say testimony of Secretary of Defense Robert McNamara bears out this contention.

The 1,300 criticize "the continuation of policies which seek military solutions to problems which are social and political in character, and the pattern of military escalation which appears to ignore long-range consequences in favor of illusory short-term gains."

In their appeal for negotiations they ask that "all parties concerned" including the Viet Cong be included in any negotiations that might be held.

The other eleven UNC signers are: Gerald Bell, Willard K. Bantz, Lee M. Brooks, Edgar W. Butler, M. Richard Cramer, Bruce K. Eckland, Glen Elder Jr., Steven Poldar, Holmwood Pope, Richard L. Simpson, and Robert N. Wilson.

McNamara Rumors Cause Concern

WASHINGTON—Robert S. McNamara's impending resignation as defense secretary was greeted in Congress Tuesday with caution, silence and expressed concern that President Johnson might be planning a major, pre-election escalation of the Vietnam war.

The White House, still not confirming McNamara's nomination to be president of the World Bank, denied at the same time that his departure would mean any change in the conduct of the war.

Also unsettled were questions of the exact timing of McNamara's move and of his successor at the Pentagon, Gov. John Connally of Texas said there was no truth to rumors he was the President's choice.

Worldwide Protests Hit De Gaulle

PARIS—Storms of protest against French President Charles de Gaulle gathered in capitals from Jerusalem to Ottawa Tuesday and at home a leading Paris newspaper called De Gaulle "a Machievellian genius with an insatiable lust for power."

The French president managed to offend nearly all of France's allies at a news conference Monday when he blamed the United States for the Vietnam war and Israel for the Middle East war; vetoed Britain's bid for the Common Market without mentioning the other five market members; called for Quebec's independence from Canada; attacked the American dollar, and called for a return to the gold standard.

De Gaulle's news conference touched off emergency cabinet meetings in Jerusalem and Ottawa and a flood of questions greeted British Prime Minister Harold Wilson in the House of Commons Tuesday.

Pearson Attacks De Gaulle Again

OTTAWA—Prime Minister Lester B. Pearson Tuesday termed French President Charles de Gaulle's encouragement of separatist leanings in the province of Quebec "intolerable" interference in Canadian internal affairs.

The future of the Canadian confederation, the aroused Pearson told the House of Commons, will be decided "for Canada, in Canada."

Pearson said De Gaulle's prophecy that Quebec would one day secede from Canada was "intolerable... and as such unacceptable" and he warned that the French President's remarks could "arouse discord in the people of Canada."

Pearson's blistering rebuff, one of the strongest ever delivered to the head of a friendly nation, gave no indication that Canada might recall its ambassador to France, even temporarily.

Situation Remains Critical In Cyprus

Turkey Tuesday night gave Greece a breathing spell in the crucial negotiations over war or peace on the island of Cyprus.

Officials in Washington, Ankara and Athens said the situation remained "very critical." But the threat of immediate hostilities between Greeks and Turks eased.

Fears of war were triggered by reports from informed sources in Ankara that Turkey had delivered an ultimatum to Greece to accept Turkish demands for settlement of the Cyprus crisis or face unspecified "necessary measures."

Johnson To Disclose Budget Cuts

WASHINGTON—The administration will disclose to Congress Wednesday the spending cuts it is willing to make to win approval of President Johnson's proposed tax increase to fight inflation and pay for increasing war costs.

The administration will present its concessions to the House Ways & Means Committee, which shelved Johnson's proposed 10 per cent tax surcharge plan Oct. 3 with the demand that the government match any tax increase with an equal reduction in spending.

Cash Loss At Snack Bar Causes Firing Of Students

By TERRY GINGRAS

of The Daily Tar Heel Staff

Four student employees of the Ehringhaus snack bar were fired before Thanksgiving vacation because of six weeks of cash register shortages, according to Tom Shetley, Exchange.

The four students were all members of the same working shift.

"I'm sure we got a few innocent people but we also got the guilty parties," said Shetley, "I hated to fire a whole shift but we couldn't catch the thieves any other way."

Shetley reported that the shortages have ceased since the four were discharged.

Shetley said the shortages were first discovered when it was noticed that the estimated inventories at the snack bar ran higher than the actual merchandise and the cash register came out short at the end of each day.

"We started an open check on the registers," said Shetley. "The first two shifts came out exactly right. The third shift, with $5-$10 extra, but when the money came in next morning it was $5 short. We had lost the extra and a little more."

There were no large errors on the cash register's tape according to Shetley. The thefts were coming because the workers were making sales without ringing it up on the register, he said.

"I think it had to be two people working together," said Shetley, "one person couldn't have hurt us that badly."

Shetley was unable to give the exact sum stolen, but said "someone did all right for about six weeks."

He said he liked student workers and that "we couldn't operate without them." He added he hated having to use the "shotgun technique" to get rid of thieves and insisted that most student employees are honest.

Two years ago there was a similar problem at the Ehringhaus snack bar in which several students were expelled from school.

Third Holiday Death Listed

Assistant Dean of Men Fred Schroeder announced Tuesday that a third Carolina student had died in an auto accident during the Thanksgiving recess.

Leon Padula Jr., a freshman, died of injuries received in the accident in Pelham Manor, N.Y., at about 2 a.m. Friday.

Padula lived in Pelham Manor. Funeral services were held Monday.

Y Court Starts Taxing

The Y Court snack bar has started charging tax on all purchases over 30 cents.

Tom Shetley, director of the Book Exchange, said Tuesday the move was necessitated by the increase in minimum wages called for by federal law.

"In the past we (the Book Ex) have paid the tax ourselves," said Shetley. "We've taken three cents out of every dollar and paid the state."

The new system means a student will now have to pay $1.03 where he only paid a dollar before.

Paying the sales tax, like the five cent increase in cigarette prices, was started after Thanksgiving vacation.

The serving system at Y Court also was changed during Thanksgiving vacation.

The new arrangement uses the cafeteria system. There are cashiers at either end of the counter and in order to get out of the serving line one must go by them.

A rail has been installed to separate the food line from the line at the supplies counter.

Shetley said the new system was designed to make service faster.

"The new method is on trial to see if it does the job better than the old system," said Shetley. "This new method also makes it easier for the help. They don't have to waste time deciding who was first in line."

Stickley Coming Here

Charlotte businessman John L. Stickley, the only announced North Carolina gubernatorial candidate, is the latest speaker to be added to the roster for the "Opportunities Unlimited" program scheduled this Saturday here.

Republican Stickley will be sharing a platform with his potential primary opponent, Congressman James Gardner of Rocky Mount, for the first time since his declaration of candidacy.

The day-long program will get underway with registration at 10 a.m. in the lobby of Gerrard Hall.

Co-sponsored by the Committee and the North Carolina GOP, "Opportunities Unlimited" is aimed at college leaders of all political persuasions. All events, with the exception of the luncheon, will be held in Gerrard Hall. Lunch will be served in Lenoir Hall.

The UNC Young Republican Club will host the program. Other headline speakers will include U.S. Senator James B.

Pearson (R-Kan.), Congressman Fletcher Thompson (R-Ga.) and Dr. John Hunger, director of arts and sciences for the Committee.

In addition to the political speakers, there will be three seminars with panelists from the business, communications, and governmental career fields. Seminar topics will be "Opportunities in Communications," "Opportunities in Government and Politics," "Opportunities in Business, the Professions, and Social Service."

The event is open.

U.S. Officials Give Talks Here Today

Four State Department officials will speak today at the following times:

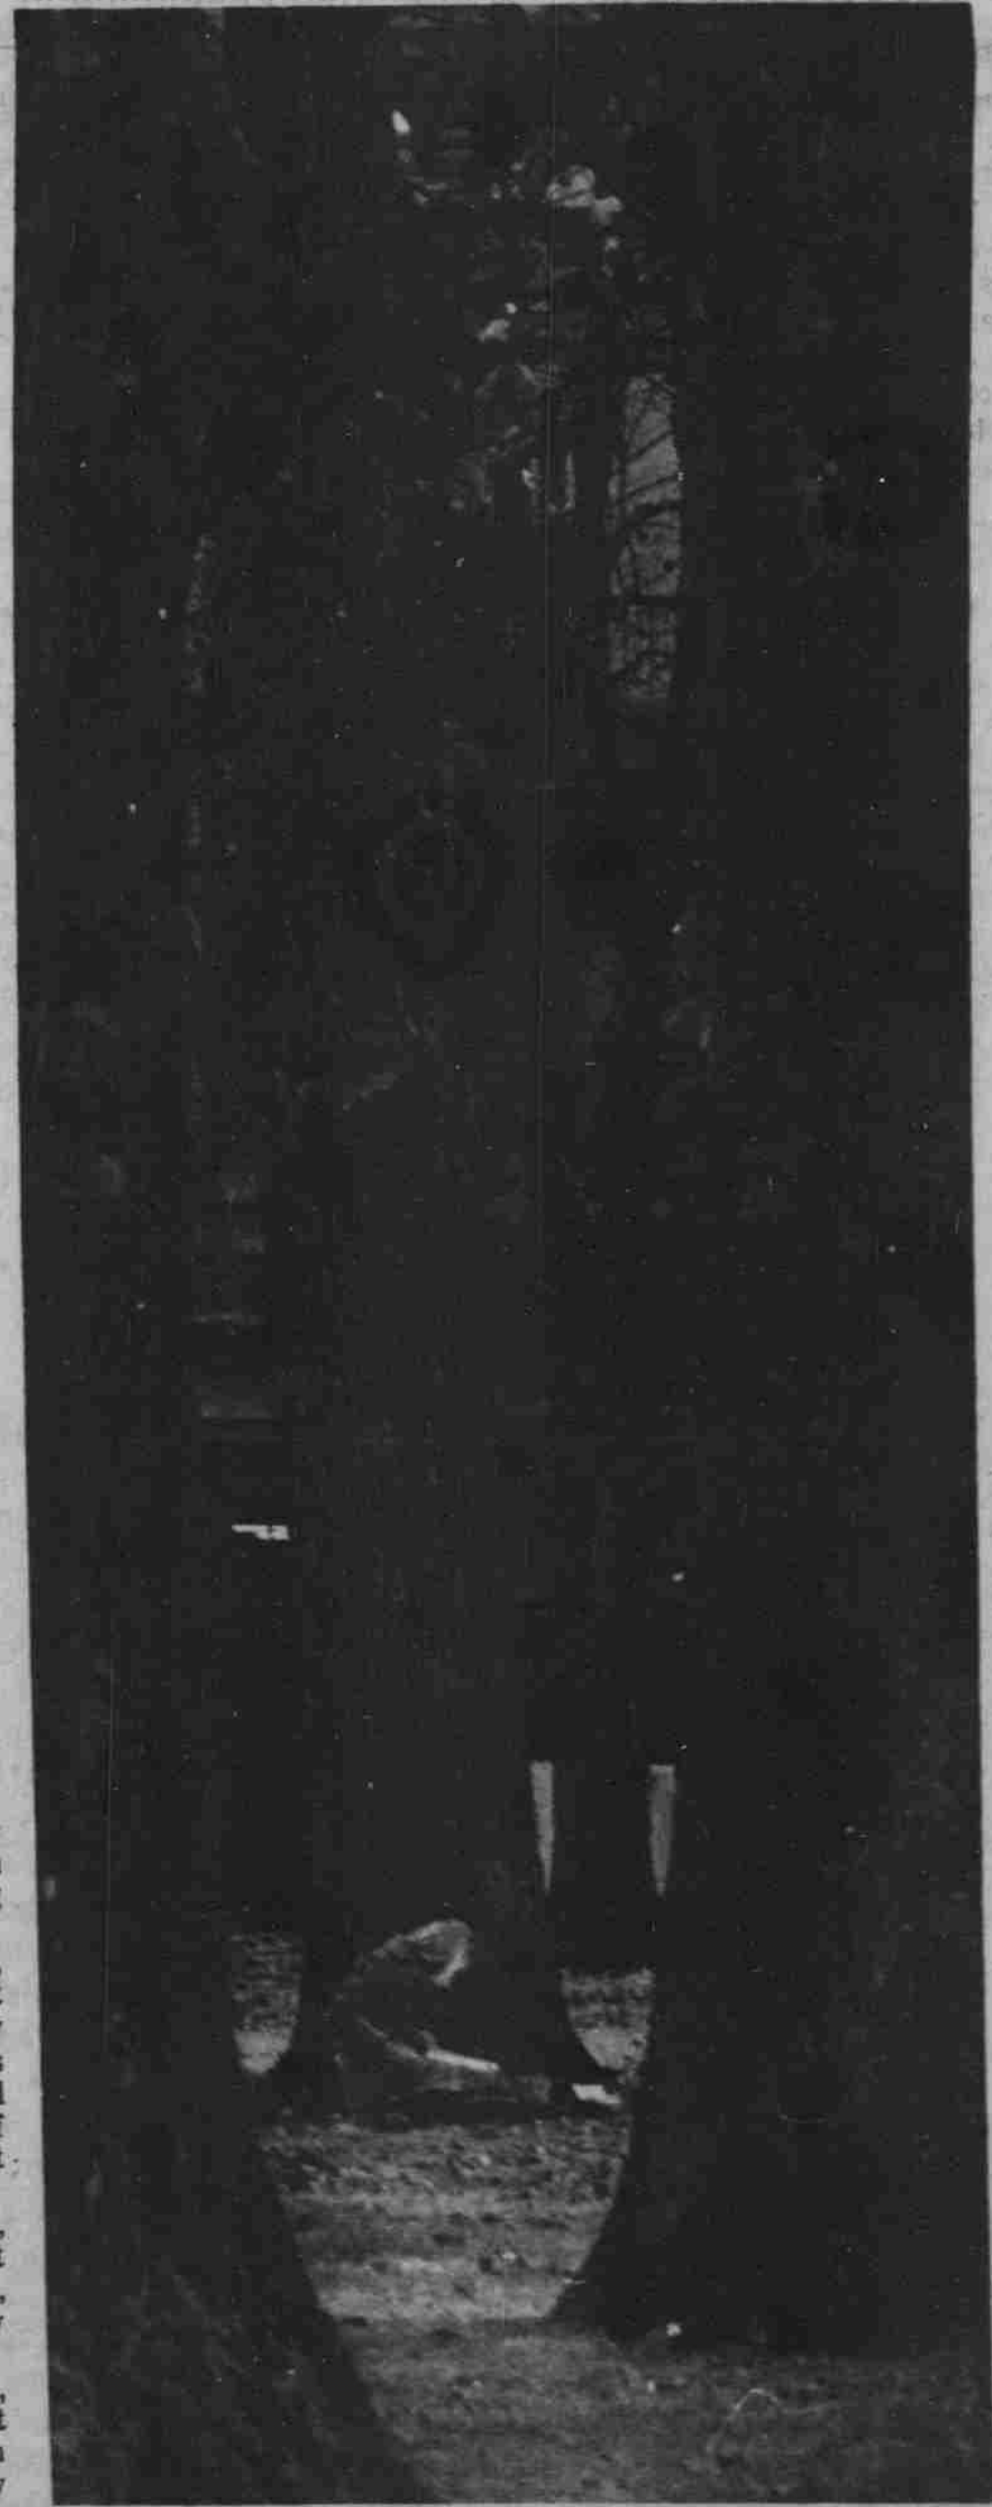

4 p.m.—All four will answer questions at the Middle South Model United Nations meeting in Roland Parker Lounge.

7:30 p.m.—William Swing, "Europe Today and East-West Relations" at the Wesley Foundation; Thomas McElhiney, informal discussion on the Union of South Africa and Rhodesia at Morrison Dormitory.

8:30 p.m.—Swing, discussion on Europe at Morrison; McElhiney, discussion on Africa at Wesley Foundation.

9:30 p.m.—Daniel Brown, discussion on the Near East at Morrison; Lewis, discussion on Vietnam at the Wesley Foundation.

From 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. in Woodhouse Room, Miss Christine Camp will distribute information on job opportunities in the State Department.

THE GRAY TREES of McCorkle Place dwarf a solitary coed as she studies in the cold. Mittens, boots, and a heavy coat are all prerequisites. The grayness of the winter campus pervades even the most industrious worker. Maybe the sun will shine soon, though. Christmas vacation is on the way.
