

Police Raid College

United Press International
A protest by more than 700 Columbia University students that began over university policy came to a swift and violent climax during the week, leaving students and faculty bitter and officials about the future course of the prestigious school.

A force of 1,000 policemen routed the students from five buildings they had occupied for seven days, dragging, carrying and leading them off to jail where they spent the night before being charged with trespassing. About 140 students were injured in the bloody melee.

The police action brought the small leftist organization that spearheaded the protest, the Students for a Democratic Society (SDS), a broad base of support among fellow students and faculty members, who called a strike. They were demanding the resignations of university President Grayson Kirk and university Vice President David Truman for calling in the police.

At the week's end, the protest and the strike had shut most of the Morningside Heights campus of the 17,500-student university for eight days.

The SDS began the protest with demands the University end construction of a gymnasium in a nearby Harlem park which the students said would deprive residents of a recreation area and that the university end participation in a Defense Department research program.

Columbia halted construction on the gym but the university's efforts to negotiate the students out of the buildings hung up over the students' demand for amnesty.

After the two-hour police sweep, a shaken and dejected Kirk appeared before newsmen to explain the action. "If Columbia had prepared to accede to the students' demands for amnesty from all disciplinary action resulting from their illegal conduct," he said, "we would have dealt a near fatal blow not only to this institution but to the whole of American education."

Appropriations Passed By SL

Student Legislature Thursday night passed out four appropriation bills favorably.

The body is presently considering the budget for the next session. Pending approval of the budget the new session will assume office.

One bill passed Thursday provided 750 for an experimental bus system to begin Monday. The appropriation will finance two buses for five days.

An additional $750 was contributed to the project by A. S. Waters, Chairman of the University's Traffic and Safety Commission.

The additional funds will fund two buses for an additional five days.

To accomplish a self-financing system, the Student Transportation Commission has arranged to charge students ten cents a ride and to solicit advertisements for the buses from Chapel Hill merchants.

The other three bills passed were:
—A supplementary budget for the Yackety Yack of $172.75.
—$300 to the executive Student Government office to cover postage, telephone, and telegraph expenditures for the rest of the school year.
—$144.16 to the executive branch of Student Government to cover previously incurred expenses.

NSA, Summer SL Set Up Interviews

Interviews for alternates to the National Student Association Congress in August and for the Summer School Government Board will be held Tuesday and Wednesday from 3 to 5 p.m. in Graham Memorial.

Tuesday's interviews will be held in Woodhouse Room and Wednesday's in Roland Parker 3.

The NSA positions are open to all students and the three Board posts are open to students who will be attending at least one of the two summer sessions.

The three chosen for the posts will assist a President and Secretary-treasurer of the summer session to be elected in the summer, in administrative matters for the two summer sessions.

Heels Ink Wuycik

By DALE GIBSON
DTH Sports Editor

Dennis Wuycik, 6-5 prep All-American from Ambridge, Pa., has signed a grant-in-aid with the University of North Carolina. Coach Dean Smith announced Saturday.

"Dennis is the type boy we like to have at Carolina," Smith said of Wuycik, who was sought by over 300 colleges and universities around the nation, probably more than any other high school player.

"He is a great basketball player and a good student as well," Smith continued. "He has the qualities of good character and a leader."

In his four-year career at Ambridge High School, Wuycik scored over 1,800 points, averaging 21 his sophomore year, 26 his junior year and 32 points his senior year. He was also president of his senior class.

It was known for several weeks that Wuycik had narrowed his choice to Carolina, Duke, and Princeton before making his final decision to attend UNC.

"I finally decided on Carolina because it seemed like the place for me," Wuycik recounted. "I was impressed with the coaches here and met several players and liked them."

Wuycik played on the same team as Dick DiVenzo, a freshman at Duke this season. DiVenzo was also a prep All-American.

"I look forward to playing Dick when we meet Duke," Wuycik said. "I just hope I don't have to play him man-to-man."

The signing of Wuycik assures Carolina of one of its finest recruiting attempts in years. The Tar Heels have already signed Steve Previs, an All-American guard and 6-9 center Greg Corson and 6-6 forward Bill Chamberlain.

DiVenzo's father coached both DiVenzo and Wuycik at the Ambridge high school.

Wuycik came to the North Carolina campus when the Tar Heels played South Carolina in Carmichael Auditorium. He said he was very impressed with the basketball officials and UNC fans.

Wuycik was also a guest of UCLA at the National NCAA tournament in Los Angeles this season He was pressed hard by the Bruins to attend the California school.

The signing of Wuycik sets up the Atlantic Coast Conference as probably the undisputedly strongest in freshman talent in the nation.

South Carolina had already announced the signing of another All-American, Tom Riker.
