

Light Reflects On The Steps To The Rathskeller

$63 Million Budget Asked

This procedure has drawn some fire from university administrators in the past. They would like to have more flexibility in spending a given sum of money for capital improvements as they wish.

As it is now, with fixed projects approved, the appropriations revert to the state if the project is not started during the biennium.

Chapel Hill's request is for $31.7 million for 20 projects in the Academic Affairs division and $31.5 million for 11 projects for the Health Affairs division.

First on the list for Academic Affairs is a request for $2.3 million for major additions to the campus utility systems.

The next three items on the list are being sought for the third straight biennium. They include a new boiler in the main power plant, a dramatic arts building, and an addition to the Ackland Art Center.

The fifth item is on the list for the fourth time; it is a request for $2.67 million for a stack addition to Wilson Library.

The increased stack facilities are needed because the graduate student enrollment is expected to increase from 3,500 now to 5,000 in 1975.

The six-man Advisory Budget Commission is chaired by State Senator Tom White of Kinston, a graduate of UNC. He was one of the prime backers of the Speaker Ban law, recently declared unconstitutional, and was an advocate of granting East Carolina College university status.

The following is a list of UNC-CH's request to the Committee:

Frosh Learn Of UNC Life

By NANCY STANCILL

"We tried to acquaint freshmen with all aspects of Carolina life in as informal an atmosphere as possible," says Carl Younger, assistant director of Freshman Camp.

Freshman Camp, which concluded Friday, was coordinated by the YMCA-YWCA. It involved some 130 new students this year. The campers participated in three days of activities designed to orient them to college life and acquaint them with their fellow students.

Some 96 freshmen men attended Camp New Hope, located about seven miles north of Chapel Hill. Athletic competition combined with speakers and special guests made up the program. Campers were organized by cabins and competed against each other in teams.

Highlighting the list of speakers was UNC basketball coach Dean Smith who presented a film depicting the Carolina team in action last season.

Other faculty speakers included Chancellor Sitterson, and Deans Cansler, Cathey and Carmichael. James Wadsworth represented the University Housing Office and Ed French spoke for the admissions office.

Student leaders, including Student Body President Ken Day, addressed the group on judicial affairs, the experimental college, and various campus institutions.

Camp Chestnut Ridge was the base for 36 freshman women during the three-day camp. Featured speakers included various administrative representatives, and several coed leaders.

Judy B. Block, one of the seven counselors at Chestnut Hill, remarked that the student leaders' program was received with "much enthusiasm" and said many favorable comments were heard on both sides.

"Freshman Camp serves as a pre-orientation, but is much freer and more personal," Miss Block said. "Freshmen feel more inclined to raise questions about college life," she continued.

When asked what type of questions freshman have about college, several camp counselors remarked that topics ranged from personal to political.

"Many campers were eager for information on campus customs concerning dating, drinking, sex, religion, and others were seriously concerned with such subjects as the student role in the classroom, and campus and community involvement," one counselor volunteered.

A student leader voiced the opinion that the current freshman class, at least those represented by freshman campers, were destined for an active role in the University.

"These students were not only concerned with football games and parties, but demonstrated much interest in educational reform, women's rules, and current national problems such as racism and political affiliation," he said.

The two camps met for a joint closing session September 13. Activities included a picnic, a panel discussion on Carolina's social life, a cheerleader's session, and coed sports.

A participating freshman remarked, "Freshman Camp was a most valuable experience for me because I had the opportunity to meet some of my classmates and learn more about Carolina. It also eased me into orientation with less difficulty."

Freshman Camp has been conducted by the YMCA-YWCA for almost 40 years for men students, but is relatively new for the coed, having been offered for five years.

Perhaps the effectiveness of the program is demonstrated by Counselor Judy Block, who remarked that "Freshmen beginning orientation immediately following camp are able to help newly-arrived freshmen make a better initial adjustment to college life."
