Later Closing Hours For Women Highlight Newly Adopted Rules

Later closing hours, involving both freshmen and upperclassmen students, headline a list of changes in women's rules.

Upperclassmen and second semester freshmen will have 1:00 a.m. closing hours Sunday through Thursday, and the coed dorms will close at 2:00 a.m. Friday and Saturday. Previously, both weeknight and weekend closing hours were an hour earlier.

First semester freshmen will also have later hours on week nights—12 midnight Monday through Thursday, Friday and Saturday hours remain 1:00 a.m., and freshmen will also be required to come in at 12 midnight on Sunday.

Another big change in freshmen regulations is abolition of closed study, previously required of all first semester coeds.

Freshmen will be required to sign out if they intend to stay out past 11:00 p.m., rather than 8:00 p.m. as in previous years.

Dress regulations have been completely deleted from the 1968-69 handbook, leaving the decisions up to the individual coed.

Concerning men's private residences, the new handbook only states, "Women are reminded of the responsibility of personal integrity that they have accepted upon entrance into the University."

"It is requested that when making decisions in the formation and upholding of personal standards, women take into consideration not only their own beliefs, but also the mores of society."

Last year the handbook explicitly stated women students could not visit men in bedrooms of private residences, and recommended two couples be present for coed apartment visits. Concerning late permissions, the rules state, "Special late permission may be granted only for unusual circumstances. It must be requested through the Dean of Women's office at least 24 hours in advance."

Previously, late permissions were divided into three categories: sign-out permission, senior permission, and campus-wide permission.

Regarding residences for women students, the rules state, "A women student who is 21 years of age or who is a senior by academic standards may reside in off-campus housing in the Chapel Hill area.

Any senior woman who is under 21 years of age must receive parental permission to reside in off-campus housing."

Dean of Women Catherine Carmichael declined to comment on the rules changes until they have actually gone into effect.

Carmichael's Assistant Named

The new Assistant to the Dean of Women Lynn Lanham had little time to get accustomed to her new position before she was overwhelmingly involved in sorority rush and orientation.

"It's really been an interesting and learning experience for me," said Miss Lanham. "I had to learn a lot in a short period of time, but I'm really happy to be back in Chapel Hill and at UNC as part of the administration."

Miss Lanham is no stranger to Chapel Hill. She earned her Master's Degree here in 1965 in guidance and counseling, and served as a graduate counselor in Whitehead Dorm in 1964 and 1965.

Miss Lanham, a native of Lincoln, Nebraska, earned her B.A. degree from Hastings College, Nebraska, where she majored in English and Education. She taught in high school for three years and served as a house counselor on the Duke University of Women's staff from 1963-1965.

Miss Lanham said she was brought back to North Carolina by "personal circumstances." She plans to marry a Duke law student in December.

As Assistant to Dean of Women, Miss Lanham takes over the duties of Mrs. Dershe McDevitt who resigned the post in August. She will work primarily with the Panhellenic Council, Orientation, and the Residence College System.

"I think sorority rush was successful this year. The idea of rushing before the beginning of classes made rush more relaxing for both the sororities and the rushees.

"UNC needs more sororities and we will continue to try to bring more to campus. The main problems are the availability of housing space and the expense of colonizing."

Miss Lanham noted the importance of the Residence College system in order to give "an equal chance to girls who cannot pledge sororities."

"Sororities are not dying on campus, but if the sororities cannot expand in number and size sufficiently to provide places for girls who wish to pledge, it is important for the residence college system to assume an even greater role."

In regard to fall orientation, Miss Lanham said she was impressed with the extensive work which went into planning the Orientation programs and that she was pleased with the relatively few problems which have occurred.

Miss Lanham cited the example of the Big Sister-Little Sister program as presenting a problem mechanically in the assignment of teams. She suggested that perhaps in the future the program would be carried on by the individual dorms rather than the orientation committee.

In regard to women's closing hours, the major concern of the coed, Miss Lanham said, "It is a matter we must move slowly into without haste. Students should not apply pressure to the point that the problem cannot be solved intelligently."

Miss Lanham added that she thought UNC should learn from the experiences of other schools which have deleted or altered closing hours and to study the merits and problems such action entails.

"I am looking forward to working with the Dean of Women, the organizations on campus and the coeds this year," Miss Lanham said in closing. "I believe we will have a fruitful year."

Sororities Pledge 150

Pre-orientation formal rush ended with approximately 150 coeds pledging sororities.

Over 400 rushees returned to UNC September 7, to begin a week of rush parties.

This is the first year fall formal rush has been held before classes and before Orientation week. It is also the first time all of the rushees have lived together.

Rush counselors lived in Cobb with groups of rushees. They represented the Panhellenic council and gave advice as to sororities.

Last year rush was held the first week of classes. Approximately 200 or the 625 who went through rush pledged sororities.

A smaller number of rushees and a large number of drop-outs were suggested by sororities as reasons for the smaller number of pledges.

A smaller number of rounds of parties was also suggested as a reason. This year rushees had four rounds before signing preferences Friday night. Last year they had five rounds to become acquainted with the sororities.

Most of the sororities did not fill their quotas and a large number of places are available. A period of informal rush will
