

The Daily Tar Heel

76 Years Of Editorial Freedom

CHAPEL HILL, NORTH CAROLINA, WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 16, 1968

Yack Photos
Appointments are no longer available. Students without appointments will be photographed from 12 until 4:30 M-F, today through Nov. 1. They will be charged a $2 late fee.

Volume 76, Number 25

Founded February 23, 1893

Nixon Asks Voters To Deny Wallace

By DALE GIBSON
DTH Managing Editor

GREENSBORO—Richard Nixon told an overflow crowd in Memorial Coliseum Tuesday that Hubert Humphrey cannot win in November but because of the threat of "the third party candidate," Humphrey may carry the nation anyway.

Without mentioning American Independent party candidate George Wallace by name, Nixon made a passionate appeal to North Carolina voters to "not let divisiveness in those forces opposed to the present administration" create victory for Humphrey.

The Republican presidential nominee spoke to over 7,000 Nixians in a major political rally here. It marked his second visit to the Tar Heel state since he received the presidential nomination.

Nixon stated that "at this time, North Carolina is a swing state" with he and Wallace vying for the state's 13 electoral votes and Humphrey running third.

"On November 5, people will and should vote against the present administration," Nixon continued. "But, don't just vote against—vote for the policies that can lead this nation down a new road."

Besides his appeal for unity among those opposed to the present administration policies, Nixon stuck to a stock campaign speech calling for an end to the war in Vietnam, a new direction in foreign policy, and end to crime in the streets, a curtailment of inflation and new trade agreements.

The Republican nominee, in an attempt to keep from alienating democrats and independents who may cast their votes for him, stated that the great issues confronting this nation "are not partisan."

Nixon said that the war in Vietnam "is not a Republican or Democratic problem. It is an issue which confronts the American people and these people must decide which man can best lead the nation."

Nixon blasted his Democratic opponent for the part the Vice President has played in helping mould American foreign policy.

"My opponent has helped make these policies over the past four years," Nixon said. "You can't name one place in the world where the United States is better off now than it was during the Eisenhower administration."

"Respect for the United States has fallen to the lowest point ever. It is down to the breaking point now and we can't afford four more years of it," Nixon told the cheering crowd.

Nixon reiterated his plea for an honorable end to the Vietnam stalemate and a new direction in foreign policy after the war.

"For 20 years, we have poured out men and money throughout the world. Other nations are now strong and rich as a result of this," Nixon added. "It is time for a foreign policy in which other nations in the free world will bear their fair share."

Nixon pointed to his record as vice president in the Eisenhower administration in which one war was ended and the nation was kept out of another war for eight years. "That is what I pledge to you today," Nixon bellowed.

DTH Staff Photo By Grant McClintock

Ray Robinson, William Halsey Debate ... But It Was Not A 'Confrontation'

100 View Y Court Debate

Discussion Draws Crowd

By J. D. WILKINSON
DTH Staff Writer

Ray Robinson, spokesman for the Refugees of Resurrection City, U.S.A., for Human Rights led an impromptu open discussion in Y-Court Tuesday afternoon which attracted a crowd of up to 100 persons.

The Refugees of Resurrection City are a group of veterans from the poverty march of last spring who are on their way to Alabama to create a new, and permanent, Resurrection City.

They are in Chapel Hill this week seeking aid for the project. The organization has a table in Y-Court from which they are soliciting funds and distributing literature.

They also hope to form a support group on the UNC campus composed of students who will be willing to donate time and effort to the building of the new "free" city.

The Y-Court discussion began at about 1:15 p.m. when Robinson approached a Marine officer stationed at a recruiting booth and engaged him in conversation.

"I asked him," Robinson said, "what was meant by a sign which said something like 'Join the Marines—the Marine Corps builds men.'"

"I told him that where I came from, people don't have to join the Marines to become men."

The conversation soon drew a large crowd and developed into an open-ended discussion.

William Halsey, a senior economics student who joined the discussion at about 2:00 p.m., said that the group touched on a number of subjects, including the ghetto problem, the Vietnam war, military service, and possible alternatives to contemporary American society.

"We disagreed on a number of points," said Halsey, "but we were trying to reach some common understanding."

At one point, Halsey asked

Robinson to explain his alternative to present society.

He pressed the issue but seemed unsatisfied with Robinson's replies.

Mr. Robinson explained later that his failure to answer the question to Halsey's satisfaction resulted from the fact that he was "rambling."

"College students know very little about our people, and when people from the ghettos come here and try to talk to them, they are not understood because students expect them to talk their way."

The discussion was still going strong when, at about 3:30 p.m., A.G. "Pete" Ivey, director of the University News Bureau, worked his way to the front of the crowd and tried to interview Robinson.

The group resented the intrusion and asked Ivey not to interrupt. Sgt. C.R. Eller, who was manning the Marine recruiting booth, tried to resume the discussion but was interrupted again by Ivey.

Ivey said later that he just "...wanted to see what was going on in front of the Marine recruiting table. I wanted to find out if people were trying to block it and whether there was some sort of confrontation."

"Other people were talking, and I felt I had a right to say something."

Winston Cleans Up On 'Dirtiest' Award

Leading the race to filthiness is Winston Dorm, winner of the first week of the "Dirtiest Dorm on Campus" contest sponsored by the Women's Residence Council.

167 graduate women living in Winston cut down on water usage to a grubby 127 gallons per person for the past week.

Spenser residents used 193 gallons per person last week, which adds up to about one more shower per student than in Winston.

Alderman, Connor and Cobb took an extra shower and washed behind their ears to record a respectful 214, 218 and 219 gallons, respectively.

The Panhellenic Council initiated a similar contest between the eight sororities last week. Ratings will be available later this week. Consumption should be low since the sororities are no longer rushing with ice water teas.

The Men's Residence Council and the Inter-Fraternity Council met yesterday with members of WRC, Panhell and members of the administration to offer its support of this contest.

One of the frats on campus will now have the opportunity to claim the official title of Dirtiest Frat House. The men's dorms are also running their own competition.

Readings were taken Monday on the fraternity houses and men's dorms. Winners in these two categories will be announced at the end of the seven-day period.

Weekly water consumption readings will be cumulative until the official termination of the drought. At that time, the Merchant's Association of Chapel Hill will brave the depths of dirt to award a prize to the winners of each of the four categories.

The WRC, MRC, IFC and Panhell encourage serious participation in these contests. Joyce Davis of the WRC said, "We decided to reduce the water consumption ourselves so that the University would not have to ration it. We're taking positive action towards this problem."

Day Discusses Sandwich Issue

Jim Glass, head of Student Consumer Services called today for students to participate in an all-campus advisory committee for the University Food Services.

The action came as a result of a meeting between Ken Day, student body president, and George Prillaman, head of the University Food Services, concerning the quality and price of sandwiches produced by the University Food Services.

Prillaman suggested that the ingredients could be reduced to the level of those used in Made-Rite sandwiches and that this would reduce the price.

The number of varieties could be reduced from 43 to 15, lowering the price further.

In response to, questions raised about, sanitary conditions in the production of the sandwiches, Prillaman stated that the sandwiches are produced by professional sandwich makers and offered to have any member of the Ways and Means Committee inspect the kitchens.

Kitchens.

Day felt that Prillaman would have no objections to having the date of production printed on the wrapper of each sandwich.

A chart comparing the prices and amounts of ingredients of the sandwiches produced by the University Food Services and those made by Made-Rite will be given to Day by Prillaman. The chart will be taken to the weekly Board of Governor's Meeting to be held Thursday night.

Day will ask for reports and recommendations from the residence colleges on the sandwiches. These recommendations will then be referred to Prillaman so that he may act on either or both of the proposals.

Prillaman enthusiastically received the suggestion that the Student Government establish the all-campus advisory committee for the University Food Services.

All students interested in serving on the committee should contact Carl Younger at the student government offices or call 933-1364 and leave their names, addresses and phone numbers.

Interest Groups Set At Morrison College

The Experimental College idea is alive and well in Morrison Residence College.

A new program which is having an enthusiastic inception this week will involve several residents of Morrison and Nurses in about 20 different interest clubs.

The clubs which "aim to bring people of similar interests together" are patterned after the informal set-up of the Experimental College.

They will include such varied groups as bridge lovers, frisbee throwers, culinary artists, horseback riders, and fencing enthusiasts.

Future activities will include a tournaments, guest speakers, and field trips.

RICHARD NIXON

UNC Students Participate In Durham Stores Boycott

By BRYAN CUMMING
DTH Staff Writer

Students from U.N.C. are now actively participating in the Durham boycott.

Bruce Wells, leader of SSOC's University and Community Committee, organized about a dozen students last weekend and turned away over 150 shoppers at Northgate Shopping Center.

Students interested in helping with the boycott should meet in the Morehead Planetarium parking lot

Thursday and Friday at 5:30 p.m.

Saturday a similar trip to Durham will leave at 1:30 p.m. Those who are interested should contact Wells at 942-5919. Transportation is needed.

Wells says that blacks in Durham have very little political power and little influence in decisions that affect them.

The Durham Housing Authority had one black member who has resigned. According to Wells, every time the man spoke up, he was overruled by the other members.

The boycott was initiated about nine months ago by the Black Solidarity Committee in Durham, led by Ben Ruffin. It is an effort by blacks to gain political power by exercising economic power.

According to Wells, the Durham black community is "unified right down the middle," rather than divided along economic lines. The boycott has the support of moderate civil rights workers as well as militants.

Wells states that the blacks have "tremendous buying power" in downtown Durham, citing the Young Men's Shop, which had 60% black patronage prior to the boycott. Whites who are helping with the boycott are working at Northgate Shopping Center, while blacks pass out leaflets in the downtown area.

The Black Solidarity Committee held a mass meeting Sunday, October 13, at the New Bethel Church in Durham. According to Wells, the attendance at the meeting was a "cross-section" of the black community, including rich, poor, militant, and civil rights workers.

The BSC mass meetings are held each Sunday. The topic of the main speech at the one last Sunday was "Now or Never."

The leaders mentioned the help that SSOC had furnished to the boycott. Wells had organized thirteen students for Friday afternoon, and ten students for Saturday, working a total of over ten hours at Northgate Shopping Center.

After the meeting, Wells spoke with some of the leaders, who asked him to organize "as

(Continued on page 6)

Interviews Today For Student Posts

Interviews for positions on several University committees and a key student government post will be held for the last time today from 3-5 p.m.

The interviews have been held over because of the overwhelming response shown last week. Those interested should see Carl Younger at the student government offices or call him at 933-1364.

Those committees with openings include:

- Student Stores Committee
- Traffic and Safety Committee
- Buildings and Grounds Committee
- Chancellor's Advisory Committee on Teaching and Curriculum (grad student)
- Committee on Established Lectures
- Admissions Director Search
- GM Board of Directors

The position of Special Assistant for Graduate Student Affairs to be filled by a grad student, is a new post and all interested should also contact Younger.

Interviews are also being held for people interested in working to organize undergraduate participation in departmental curriculum planning. Interested students should come by the student government offices or call and leave their name, address and phone number.

Beauty Contest

The dream girl of UNC's 61-member football team (and for that matter the whole school's ideal female) will be chosen tonight at 8:00 in the Rams Club Room.

The judges will pick the "Queen of UNC Football" from one of ten finalists: Ginger Wallin, Alicia Smith, Jan Myers, Kin Eismirger, Pam Faber, Linda Franklin, Judy Froeber, Cindy Simpkins, Sue Ellen Worley, and Mary Jane Brooks.

UNC's queen will represent the school in an A.C.C. contest to be held in Raleigh Nov. 2. The winner of this regional contest will be presented during half-time at the N.C. State-Clemson game and then go on to represent the conference in the National Queen of College Football competition.

DTH Staff Photo By Tom Schnabel

Yes, It Rained Again Yesterday ...
... But It Did Little For The Situation