

'Time-Out'

Representatives of various campus organizations met today with Charles Jeffress, a member of the Supervisory Board of the National Student Association, and Ken Day, student body president, to discuss plans for Time-Out Day projected for Oct. 29.

The group discussed questions about the validity of the theory behind Time-Out Day, whether Time-Out would be misinterpreted as a boycott of classes, what organizations and speakers should participate in this day, and what specific issues might be discussed as Time-Out topics.

The representatives decided that Time-Out Day should be a day on which basic questions about the university and its relationship to society might be raised. The focus will be on larger-than-campus issues.

An open meeting will be held Tuesday, Oct. 22, in front of Silent Sam at 4 p.m. for all students and organizations interested in taking an active part.

Discussions on the university in society, how the university is treating the racial issue in contrast with international treatment, and the responsibility of the university to the student are planned.

Robert Powell, former student body president and present NSA head, is scheduled to return to Chapel Hill on Time-Out Day to address the student body.

Supporters Meet Sunday

Resurrection City Planned

By TOM GOODING
DTH Staff Writer

An organizational meeting to set up support for Resurrection City will be held Sunday Oct. 20 at 2 p.m. in Ill Murphy.

The meeting will be sponsored by the Wesley Foundation. Lawrence Whitfield, social action chairman of the Wesley Foundation, said, "This isn't going to serve as a refugee camp and it won't be just another typical example of whites helping poor blacks." When the Resurrection City is set up in Alabama it is planned to be a multi-racial effort. "This city won't be for only the poor. We need anyone who can help in the formation of an ideal city. We have already had some professors volunteer to go down to Alabama and help set up an educational system."

The city is being designed by a group of University of Maryland architecture students. There is currently a great need for people to work on a newspaper for the city. This paper according to Whitfield will "not only serve the residents of Resurrection City but will also be used as a communication media to inform anybody anywhere concerned with the project."

The first group of refugees are expected to arrive in Alabama around Thanksgiving. Current plans call for about 5,000 residents.

"Some people from around here have already indicated an interest in going down there during Christmas to live and work as a part of the city.

"However, there is a great need for many items before the city can properly function. The city will have a hospital and consequently there is a need for medical supplies. We need financial aid such as grants and donations and there is an urgent need for transportation such as buses to carry the people down there, said Whitfield.

"Another thing we need is proposals. People who don't have time to do anything else could come and just give us their ideas on how to form the city. For example, sociology, economics or city planning students could supply us with ideas on how the city can be organized," Whitfield said.

Whitfield emphasized that this is not a refugee camp or a camp for only poor people. "This is to be an ideal community for anybody who is willing to commit himself to a dream."

Gladys May Bring Much Needed Rain

While weathermen at Raleigh-Durham Airport offer a "for sure" three-quarters of an inch of badly-needed rain to the area over the next two days, speculation is rising that Hurricane Gladys might really do the trick.

The hurricane, if it passes directly over the center of North Carolina, would likely do little damage, they say. Furthermore, it would bring along two to four inches of rain—enough to cause sufficient run-off to stave off the water crisis for several weeks.

What A Day For A Daydream

...But Standing Up While Leaning On A Car???

Mrs. John Kennedy Discloses Plans To Marry Onassis Within The Week

NEW YORK (UPI)—Mrs. John F. Kennedy has found romance after nearly five years of widowhood and will marry 62-year-old Greek shipping billionaire Aristotle Socrates Onassis, probably within a week, it was announced Thursday.

The announcement made by Mrs. Kennedy's mother, Mrs.

Hugh D. Auchincloss of Washington and Newport came as a surprise to all but a few of the 39-year-old former First Lady's intimates. For nearly a decade Onassis, a divorcee, had been linked to tempestuous opera star Maria Callas, but their idyll ended last summer. Nancy Tuckerman, Mrs. Kennedy's secretary, said she was uncertain about the date or the place of the marriage but that she thought it would occur within the week rather than in two or three weeks.

Another informed source said the ceremony would be "on an island somewhere." Onassis owns the Aegean island of Skorpios.

The engagement came after months of speculation over Mrs. Kennedy's friendship with the Earl of Harlech, British ambassador to Washington during the Kennedy Administration. While Harlech was denying they were anything but "devoted friends", Mrs. Kennedy's longtime friendship with Onassis was deepening into love.

Mrs. Kennedy is Roman Catholic and the attitude of the church toward her marriage to a divorced person may force her to be married in a civil ceremony or in the Greek Orthodox faith of Onassis.

Onassis was divorced in 1960 by his first wife, Greek shipping heiress Athina Tina Livanos, after 14 years of marriage. The Vatican recognizes the validity of Greek Orthodox marriages, so that his remarriage within the Roman Catholic church would depend on unusual and extenuating circumstances.

Mrs. Kennedy was first entertained aboard Onassis' 325-foot yacht, Christina, on a Mediterranean cruise while she was still First Lady. Onassis was the first person outside the family to visit her at the White House after her return from Dallas with her assassinated husband's body in 1963.

Sources in Athens said Mme. Callas decided to walk out of Onassis' life after he invited Mrs. Kennedy and Sen. Edward M. Kennedy for a recuperative cruise to Skorpios Island aboard the Christina last August after the assassination of Sen. Robert F. Kennedy. The diva had divorced her Italian industrialist husband, Giovanni Banghini, for love of Onassis.

"Onassis never left Mrs. Kennedy's side during her one-week vacation on the island," said an informed source in Athens. "Maria left the island just before an all-night party Onassis gave for Jackie."

Before the announcement Onassis had laughed off rumors of a romance saying, "Jackie told me she likes tall, thin men. I don't think I fit the description."

Froeber Will Represent UNC At Beauty Contest

Miss Judy Froeber, a blue-eyed blonde from Winston-Salem, was chosen Miss UNC Football Queen Wednesday night.

Miss Froeber, last year's Yack Queen and a Tri-Delt, is a junior majoring in special education. As queen, she will act as UNC's representative to the ACC Football Queen Contest to be held in Raleigh Nov. 2.

The contest, sponsored nationally by Chevrolet, will choose a National Football Queen from the winners of the various conference contests. The finals for the crown will be held in Los Angeles later in the year. The winner will receive a $1,000 scholarship and will appear in Chevrolet advertisements during her reign.

Three requirements are placed on each contestant who enters the contest. First, she must be in good academic standing; second, she must not be planning to marry in the near future; third, each contestant must be returning to her school for the second semester of the school year.

Twelve contestants participated in the contest held Wednesday night. The atmosphere was informal as the girls talked with each of the six judges informally before questions were posed to the participants.

Miss Froeber was questioned about her major and future plans after her graduation. She replied that it was her desire to teach physically handicapped children at the kindergarten level. Her student training begins next year, and after graduation she hopes to return to North Carolina after working in Philadelphia for a while.

Chosen as runner-up to Miss Froeber was Miss Kem Eisiminger, a junior transfer student from the University of Mississippi. She was asked to compare the support and enthusiasm of Carolina and Ole Miss. for their respective football teams.

She responded by saying that the enthusiasm here is greater to the extent that the students at Carolina will support the football team when it is losing, whereas at Ole Miss, they won't.

In the event that Miss Froeber is unable to act as the representative for UNC, Miss Eisiminger will assume the title.

'Murder Trial' Set Today

By J. D. WILKINSON
DTH Staff Writer

Wayne Hurder, Daily Tar Heel editor and noted "mad-dog" political assassin, goes on trial in the UNC Law School courtroom today for the mock murder of student body vice-president and professional political hack, Charlie Mercer.

Hurder is accused of "gunning-down" Mercer

Monday afternoon in Y-Court before a large number of students and faculty members.

The "Mercy-killing" trial will commence at two o'clock this afternoon in the University's new Van Hecke-Wettach Law School Building.

The Honorable L.H. Thornberg, prominent western North Carolina judge, will preside.

Hurder is expected to plead "not guilty by reason of temporary insanity."

Reportedly, his attorneys will call to the stand a number of Daily Tar Heel readers to support that contention.

Hurder refused to discuss his trial in detail Thursday, saying that he feared such discussion would prejudice his case.

The articulate Hurder did say, however, in his most polished southern Illinois (Georgia) accent, that he felt he had done "... That (censored) grit Mercer" a favor.

Student Body Vice-President Mercer said Thursday afternoon, when located in the Daily Tar Heel Business office, that he "may drop in to the trial to see Hurder get his."

A reliable source revealed Thursday afternoon that Bruce Strauch, noted cartoonist and professional anti-hack hack, is in line for Hurder's job should the law students' count become over-zealous and condemn the editor to death for killing Mercer. "That noble knight of Day's forces."

Meanwhile, Student Body President Ken Day has organized a committee to study "the ethical jurisdiction for the elimination of student politics on the UNC campus."

Hurder will be defended by law students Joel Stevenson, Gerald Shaw, and Louis Sauls. The prosecuting attorneys, law students Joe Savona, Harmon Stevens, and Fred Johns, will ask for the death penalty.
