

Top ACC QBs Duel Saturday

Two of the Atlantic Coast Conference's most explosive offensive players clash at Winston-Salem Saturday when North Carolina and Wake Forest renew their ancient football feud.

It'll be Freddie Summers of the Deacons against Gayle Bomar of the Tar Heels in the battle of quarterbacks. Summers currently ranks second in the ACC in total offense while Bomar is third.

Summers and Bomar have clashed once before in last year's game at Kenan Stadium which was won by the Deacons, 20-10. Bomar won the individual duel that day with 234 yards total offense compared to 162 for the Deacon signal caller.

Both the Tar Heels and the Deacons have flashed plenty of offensive punch in recent games. Last week for example, Carolina rolled up 22 points in scoring an upset over the University of Florida. Wake Forest tallied 27 against powerful Purdue only to lose a 28-27 heartbreaker.

Coach Bill Dooley calls the Deacons "the best winless team in America."

"The season record simply isn't a very good indication of the kind of team Wake Forest has," he says. "We'll have to play every bit as good as we did against Florida if we even hope to win the game."

Deacs' Reputation Doesn't Fit Showing

Deacon Quarterback Freddie Summers
... Second In ACC Total Offense

By OWEN DAVIS
DTH Sports Editor

Winless Wake Forest, Carolina's opponent Saturday, is a paradoxical football team.

The Demon Deacons are known for an explosive offense, which features defending conference total offense leader Freddie Summers, but are actually last in the Atlantic Coast Conference in scoring.

Wake has played some of the country's best defensive teams in Minnesota, Purdue and North Carolina State while compiling an 0-4-1 record, and its scoring attack has suffered.

The Deacs defense on the other hand, supposedly the weak part of the team, is tops in the conference in total defense.

The Baptists' mixed-up world is heightened by their four losses and a tie. Although the Deacs have not won with half the season played, they have been outscored by only 11 points in the five games combined.

Two losses (Purdue and Virginia Tech) were by one point and another one (Minnesota) came after Wake led by more than a touchdown in the last quarter.

To demonstrate the futility of the Deacs' season to date, Indiana, last year's Big 10 representative in the Rose Bowl, has been outscored 19 points in five games but has a 3-2 record.

Wake Forest's offense has moved the ball well through the air, but quarterback Summers has thrown several untimely interceptions.

The Deac passer has thrown for 816 yards but has been intercepted 11 times. He did not have any intercepted last week against Purdue, however, as the Deacs changed their passing strategy somewhat.

Before, Summers was throwing into a crowd in hopes of reaching a receiver, but he now eats the ball or runs from the pocket when his pass catchers are not open.

Summers' 960 total yards makes him second in the conference tandem offense column. His 144 rushing yards may look unimpressive, but he has lost over 100 yards while trying to pass.

The Deacons' running game has suffered this season even though the Wake Forest backfield is the ACC's quickest. Sprinter Jack Dolbin was hurt in the VPI game but is expected to play Saturday. Buz Leavitt, Lee Clymer and Jim Johnson are the other Deac runners, but their statistics do not equal their pre-season publicity.

The Wake receivers are adequate, and tight end Ron Jurewicz has grabbed 21 passes. Fred Angerman and Rick White are the flankers. Angerman is a long passing threat.

The Deacon defense meanwhile is the best in the nation against the pass. It has allowed only 359 yards and 42.7 percent completions. It is ironic, however, that Wake has intercepted fewer passes than any team in the conference.

The pass defense has been good enough to give Wake the total defense lead in the ACC. The Baptists have allowed just 278 yards a game.

Linebacker Carlyle Pate, the Deacs' best defender, joins Dolbin in returning to the lineup after a VPI injury.

Pate depends on quickness to make his tackles (he weighs only 198,) and his leg injury may hamper him considerably.

But John Mazalewski, one of Wake's several junior college transfers, has been a surprise at the other linebacker spot and may cover up for Pate.

Hartig — UNC's Arthritic Kicker

By RON SHINN
Special to the DTH

Don Hartig, who answered a want ad in the student newspaper and has since booted his way to every place-kicking record at the University of North Carolina, is a football phenomena on arthritic knees.

"My ligaments and cartilage are real sound, but the doctor told me that I'm a 21-year-old boy with 60-year-old knees. They're just worn out," said Hartig after igniting the Tar Heels' 22-7 victory over Florida with a record breaking 47-yard placement, the longest ever by a Carolina kicker.

He added two more during the afternoon, a 44 yarder and a 42 yarder, to set a school record of six field goals in a single season (old mark: five by Danny Talbott in 1965) and tied the record for number of field goals in a single game (mark: three by Robbins Lowe in 1921). Saturday's performance was during a hard rain.

Hartig grew up dreaming about playing football but was forced to give up the game during his sophomore year here because of the weak knees which had already been permanently damaged.

The son of a Carolina blocking back during the Charlie Justice era, Hartig was a tackle at Greensboro's Grimsley high school. He did only a limited amount of field goal kicking but did manage to boot a 39 yarder his senior year.

Encouraged by his dad to play at Carolina, Hartig had no trouble deciding where to go to college.

back on the counters and establish fair competition of brands, Mr. Shetley stated "I am inclined to say no, because the idea behind the university producing the sandwiches to keep dining halls in the black is good."

Mr. Shetley noted that he did not think the majority of the students have actually complained about there not being another brand of sandwich offered. "Sales haven't fallen off that much," he said.

Petitions circulated through residence colleges asking for better labeling, cleaner conditions under which the sandwiches are produced, better quality and lower prices of UNC sandwiches are being collected this week. Rick Page will present them to Mr. Shetley as positive action showing student concern on this issue.

Sports Notices

Today is "probably" the last day for Wake Forest tickets according to UNC ticket manager Jean Keller. Student tickets for the Winston-Salem game are $3 and date ducats are $6. It was also announced that the UNC-Wake freshman game rained out last Friday has been rescheduled for Nov. 15.

The Co Rec Carnival will be held next Tuesday night Oct. 29 in Woollen Gym.

A representative from each team must attend an organizational meeting Monday night at 7 o'clock in 304 Woollen Gym.

Teams must be on the main floor of Woollen Tuesday night at 7 in order to participate.

It should be noted that the Co-Rec Carnival is a special event of the Intramural Office, and that regular intramural games are still suspended.

Freshman candidates for the UNC wrestling team will report to the wrestling room at 4 p.m. Friday, Nov. 1, for an organizational meeting. Varsity grapplers will draw their uniforms and lockers and report for the first practice at 4:30 the same day.

Head Coach Sam Barnes said he expects one of the strongest teams in recent years with 12 lettermen in camp. The schedule is one of the most ambitious with 15 dual meets and three tournaments for the varsity and eight separate meets for the freshman squad.

A charter bus trip is now being organized from Chapel Hill to New York City for the Holiday Festival Basketball Tournament.

The bus will leave early Friday morning, Dec. 27, and will return following the triple header on Dec. 30.

Passengers will be taken to Times Square.

The cost is $21.30 per person. There are 38 spaces available, 21 of which are filled.
