

UNC Counselor

Dr. Eastman Cares

By ARTHUR R. WILLIAMS

Who can help you if you have problems with your dating, premarital life, or marital relationships? Just dial 966-8636 and make an appointment with Dr. William F. Eastman, the Marriage Counselor for the University. For the past three years he has helped young people at Carolina to face life and their relationships with other people through a new understanding. Dr. Eastman's free service helps "the client to understand his needs, feelings, and behavior and make his own choices." His purpose is to work with a person's strengths and weaknesses not as an umpire but as a counselor. The doctor, whose office is at 205 Intern's Quarters, has a Master's in social work from the University of Maryland and a Doctorate in Marriage Counseling from the University of Pennsylvania.

People who need assistance with an interpersonal relationship, whether with a girlfriend, boyfriend, or spouse, can talk over their problem with Dr. Eastman. The doctor often challenges a client by confronting him with the idea that he is wrong or at least partly to blame for the problem.

Girls make up the greatest number of clients Dr. Eastman sees in the course of his duties. The usual problems include breaking off from boyfriends, deciding about virginity, and how to handle an out of wedlock pregnancy.

The doctor says his services "give a girl a chance to talk through the situation with someone." Concerning virginity, the doctor says, "Sometimes the girl is afraid to get too involved and wants to step back a little." Adoption, marriage, and abortion are topics of discussion which help an unmarried pregnant girl decide her future.

Boys see the doctor less frequently. Usually when they are seriously considering marriage or in a crisis, if a boy gets a girl pregnant, his feelings and reaction to the situation are often ignored says the doctor.

"The boy is usually worried about his responsibility and his part in deciding what to do with the child." There are guilt feelings and many boys want to run out and get married, says the doctor, thinking that will solve their problem. "Pregnancy is not the most important qualification for getting married."

Usually both people are needed at the one hour interviews because both people are causes of the problem. Being able to see non-student spouses allows Dr. Eastman to clear up problems much more easily.

Sometimes instruction is needed to teach the client some basics about the opposite sex. The doctor says "all psychotherapy is educational." There is a sexual adjustment to marriage, and resentment can mount if a couple is expecting too much too soon. Dr. Eastman says, "in just talking with them they realize how unreasonable their expectations are. My purpose is to help them understand what they are doing."

DID SOMEONE SAY SALE? This panting doggie ran all the way to take advantage of the magic word. He sits patiently outside waiting for the book store to open. Who knows, maybe he reads?

Humorous Happenings: UNC In 1929, 1939

By MEREDITH MULLINS

Chapel Hill, long recognized as a leading intellectual center, earned its place on the map in 1929 as a center of progress. "Modern Week" was proclaimed by the mayor to honor a "splendid new vitaphone" (i.e. talking movies) installed in the Carolina Theatre. "It brings Broadway and Chapel Hill one step closer together," the mayor proudly announced.

The first movie: "Thrill to the talking screen! Jeanne Eagles stars in a tremendously powerful drama of married love—'Twin Beds.'"

Homecoming activities were scheduled. Highlights included not only the UNC-Georgia football game and the dedication of the library, but also a formal conference on education. (Hang in there, Carolina Union.)

The Chapel Hill police chief took his usual stand against drinking and/or unruly conduct but showed refreshing insight and understanding: "Realizing that college students are naturally possessed with a great amount of boisterousness, we try to give the benefit of the doubt to the student. But youthful good spirits are entirely different from intoxication."

The Dean of Student Affairs announced only six cuts permitted this year to the sophomores.

Sutton's Drug Store advertising campaign raged on: "Of course you want to make the best impression on that newly discovered femme, so when you take her to the drug store and she orders one of the regular drinks, suggest she try sparkling SHERRI-COLA. She'll appreciate your good taste as well as that of the drink."

1939

Unfinished dorms and crowded conditions started the 1939 school year in chaos. Over 300 students roomed in town awaiting the completion of two new dorms. Co-eds on campus were required to sleep two in a bed and on the floor. It was reported, however, that "the girls thought it was fun." "I feel just like a pioneer enduring all this hardship," said one of the newcomers.

Durham Coca-Cola Bottling advertising subtly suggested, "There's no place like home for the pause that refreshes."

The essence of reality was dramatized in "Golden Boy" at the Carolina Theatre. The movie was summarized by two quotes in its ad:

William Holden: "I'm going to beat life to the punch. I want happiness when I'm young."

A lemonade hike was sponsored by the YM-YWCA where boys met in Y-court then hiked to Spencer for lemonade, cookies and girls.

A survey showed that new co-eds praised dorms, hospitality and the quantity of men (not necessarily in that order).

And finally, seven female grad students made a desperate plea in a letter to the editor: "No one knows we are here. Our youth, beauty and personality entitle us to widespread recognition. We range from blonde to brunette, exotic to romantic, divinely tall to charmingly demure. We have privileges but no excuse to use them. Midnight is our deadline but the library closes at 10:30. We have love seats in the parlors, but who can love alone and like it? If this letter does not prove effective, we shall be forced to issue our ultimatum."
