

Union Games Facilities Insure Student Fun With Indoor Sports

One of the Carolina Union's less conspicuous programming units is suddenly finding itself very important.

The Games Committee has, in the past, been hampered by limited facilities and campus ignorance of just what kinds of recreation the Union offers.

Never again.

With an entire floor in the new Student Union dedicated to fun-and-games, it's unlikely that any Carolina student should be faced with "all work and no play."

The first big event? An intercollegiate Bridge Tournament to be held this Sunday afternoon in the new Union.

No preregistration is necessary for this activity—students need only come Sunday at 2 p.m. to participate in Association of College Unions-International event.

It is a pair contest; players have the same partners throughout.

All pairs will compete first on campus (the Sunday afternoon event), and the winning pair or pairs are eligible to compete in the regionals. North-South competitions and internationals meet will follow.

The players will deal with pre-analyzed duplicate hands.

The only requirement for entering Sunday afternoon's tournament is that the person should not have competed in the ACUI bridge tourney in the past four years. It is open to graduates and undergrads.

Lester Martin, a UNC junior who heads the Games Committee, is enthusiastic about the prospects.

"Not only will bridge-lovers get a chance to participate in a competition-arrangement, but we also hope the tournament will provide a chance for students to visit the Union during one of its first activities."

But bridge is not the half of it.

Walk down the stairs into the basement of the Union and you will see The Future of Union Games.

Seven billiards tables are now in operation at the west end of the building's lower floor, with ten additional tables expected in about two weeks.

The parlor is equipped with custom lighting and is fully carpeted.

Martin commented on future activities with billiards: "In late February, we're hoping to establish special coed nights, with billiards lessons for those girls who want to participate but don't know much about the game.

"Later in the spring," he added, "we want to have a couples-competition and also feature a visiting billiards expert in exhibition."

Next to the billiards room lies an open space occupied by assorted cardtables.

The tables are also imprinted with chess and checker-board designs, for the most versatile use. Chessmen, checkers and cards are available all day at the information desk upstairs.

Lessons in bridge and chess are also slated to begin soon, after arrangements can be made for scheduled exclusive use of tables.

The third section of the Union's downstairs area is a signal of Things to Come: namely, the 12 bowling lanes which will be installed next month.

These will be constantly open for student recreation (highlighted by occasional ladies' nights) and physical education classes will also be held there.

Martin also spoke of miscellaneous activities which the Games Committee is planning. "We're arranging bicycle races, sportcar rallies and special activities for married students."

The Committee was responsible for the Christmas party given last month for the children of married students.

Plans are also being discussed to provide a permanent Challenge Board for individuals to practice their bridge hands and chess moves.

So whether it's group sports or a little solitary leisure entertainment, just walk on over to the new Union.

Actress Presents Reading

Broadway and television star Eugenia Rawls will be presented in a one woman show, "An Evening With Fanny Kemble," at the Playmakers Theatre on Saturday, January 11th at 8:00 P.M.

Miss Rawls, a former Playmaker, has played leading roles on Broadway with Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne, Tullulah Bankhead, Helen Hayes, and Jose Ferrer, in such plays as "The Little Foxes," "The Great Sebastians," "The Strike," and "The Children's Hour."

On television she appeared for two years on "Love of Life," and her credits include "The Nurses," "Look Up and Live," and "Road to Reality." "An Evening With Fanny Kemble" is the result of years of research, both in the United States and England, by Miss Rawls. The show consists of readings from Miss Kemble's published journals and letters written by her which have never before been made public.

Fanny Kemble was a British actress who made her debut at London's Covent Garden as Juliet in 1829. She became a fabulous success in Europe and won high acclaim as an actress during her triumph in America in the 1830's. Among Miss Kemble's acquaintances were Longfellow, Thackeray, and Sir Walter Scott.

One of her most moving letters is an account of meeting slave women in Georgia. Her reaction to social conditions in

Complimentary tickets for the reading are available at the Playmakers Business Office at 214 Abernethy. Tickets guarantee seating up until 7:45, after which time the theatre will be opened to the public regardless of tickets.

Interested students however must remember that finding work abroad is very difficult because of the competition for the jobs among American students.

"Restrictions on the employment of foreign citizens exist in most countries and work permits usually are required," Miss Ellis said. "Language is often a barrier if the student is not fluent in another language. Some employers will hire their own nationals before they will hire foreigners. The pay is often very low and the opportunity for travel, despite the image, is often limited."

For those students who still want to work abroad, Miss Ellis quickly adds that such work can be extremely rewarding.

The UNC Placement Office now has information on many summer overseas job opportunities and an agency's placement representative will be on campus today.

"There are pros and cons in working abroad which I would like to stress," said Miss Jerry Ellis, summer job placement counselor. "An overseas job offers the experience of seeing other places and of getting away from the academic world. During this time a student has a chance to perfect language skills and meet interesting people and become familiar with different ways of living."
