

Employee's Law Firm Sues University

By AL MOODY

The law firm representing the UNC Non-Academic Employees Union plans to sue the University of North Carolina for failure to carry out negotiated agreements resulting from the food workers' strike of this spring.

J. LeVonne Chambers, of Chambers, Stein, Ferguson and Lanning, advised State Attorney General Robert Morgan of the suit in a letter dated June 16.

Chambers charged that "On the part of the University I have never seen more flagrant abuse of authority and responsibility and ill concern with integrity."

Specifically cited in the letter was the laying-off of several adult cafeteria employees and "threats" that more employees would be "laid-off shortly."

Chambers said "We cannot but consider this bad faith on the part of the University and further indication that the University has no intention of carrying out the understanding we had reached."

Concerning the planned suit, Chambers said, "I am sorry that we have had to take this action since I had sincerely hoped that we had worked out the problem to the mutual satisfaction of all parties."

"I am sure that you can appreciate the difficult position I have been put in because it was with my assurance that the problems would be worked out that led the workers to return to work."

Chambers said he had requested meetings with University officials to work out details of a final settlement as early as April 24.

However, Chambers added that "To this date, we have not been permitted to meet with any of the officials of the University."

Chambers requested a meeting with J.C. Eagles, Vice-Chancellor of Business Finance, in May "prior to the University contracting with a private catering service, again, without any success."

SAGA Food Services took over operations of all University dining facilities on May 19.

In a statement made two weeks ago Mrs. Elizabeth Brooks, president of the Non-Academic Workers' Union, expressed initial dissatisfaction with the new management.

Since then Mrs. Smith said, "many misunderstandings" have been cleared up, including cutting back student employees' hours and temporary relocation of regular workers laid off in summer, all of whom are now guaranteed fall jobs.

BOOK EX PIT WILL SOON HAVE TREES

The vast, dusty pit in front of the UNC Book Exchange has been the center of much campus inquiry recently. The Campus and Grounds Department has designed, and begun construction on a sunken brick patio surrounded by brick steps. Two shade trees will be planted in the center.

UNC maintenance workers and students will do all the construction work themselves in order to cut the cost of building the patio almost in half. Completion of the campus project will be in early September. As yet, no plans for dedication have been announced.

Trustees Set Policy To Control Disorder

By TOM GOODING

The Board of Trustees of the University of North Carolina have adopted a policy statement concerning the disruption of the educational processes and of other University activities by any member of the University community.

The policy prohibits the occupation of any University building; blocking the entrance to any building or room; setting fire to University property; any display or threat to use firearms or other weapons; prevention of the convening or orderly conduct of any University class; inciting or organizing attempts to prevent student attendance at classes and blocking normal pedestrian or vehicular traffic.

The policy further denies any administrative official, faculty member, student or employee of the University the authority to grant amnesty or to make any promises concerning legal action concerning the violation of any of these policies.

Adopted at the meeting of the Board of Trustees on May 26 the policy will be officially announced to all faculty members, students and employees of the university on July 1. Accompanying the announcement is the statement, "You will understand that all members of the University will be bound by these official statements adopted by the Board of Trustees."

According to the statement any member of the university community who violates the policy will be "subject to suspension, expulsion, discharge or dismissal from the University."

The complete notice from Chancellor Sitterson reads as

"The University of North Carolina has long honored the right of free discussion and expression, peaceful picketing and demonstrations, the right to petition and peaceably to assemble. That these rights are a part of the fabric of this institution is not questioned. They are secure. It is equally clear, however, that in a community of learning willful disruption of the educational process, destruction of property, and interference with the rights of other members of the community cannot be tolerated.

"(1) Any student or faculty member (including full-time or part-time instructor) who willfully by use of violence, force, coercion, threat, intimidation or fear, obstructs, disrupts, or attempts to obstruct or disrupt, the normal operations or functions of any of the component institutions of the University, or who advises, procures, or incites others to do so, shall be subject to suspension, expulsion, discharge, or dismissal from the University.

"The following, while not intended to be exclusive, illustrate the offenses encompassed herein: occupation of any University building or part thereof with intent to

A grant of $50,000 has been received from the National Science Foundation by the Department of Chemistry for a complex instrument used to determine the structure of molecules.

A research project dealing with the processes by which one person makes inferences about another has also received a $23,600 grant from the Foundation.

The $100,000 instrument used to research molecular structure, an automated x-ray diffractometer, will be installed this summer, according to Dr. W.F. Little, department chairman. The additional funds will come from several other sources.

The instrument reduces the time required for determining molecular structures from a matter of months to a matter of
