

Anheuser-Busch Negotiates

End Of Beer Strikes 'In Sight'

An end to the beer strikes is in sight, but no beer is yet.

The striking brewery workers of Anheuser-Busch accepted one-year contracts at Jacksonville, Fla., and Houston, Tex., Sunday ending the month long strike.

Pabst and Schlitz Companies are now negotiating, according to officials at their respective distributing companies in Durham.

Durham's Ace Distributing Company, which distributes Anheuser-Busch products, reports that production was to begin Wednesday in St. Louis, Mo.

"Even if we get the first shipment from St. Louis, it will be at least a week before we're in business again," an official reported.

The Carolina Distributing Company, which distributes Pabst Blue Ribbon, reports that their supply is limited and that there has been no official word beyond the fact that the company is now negotiating with the striking workers.

"We will close down Wednesday night (July 2) for at least four days," an official reported. "We hope to have some inventory come soon."

The Durham Distributing Company, which distributes Schlitz, reports, "we're not hurtin' yet." They expect to hear from their district office this week as to the negotiations.

The strikes have not been felt much in Chapel Hill, but there are subtle indications. Michelob, in some hangouts, for example, has disappeared. Grocers are trying to stock up a little more than usual. One restaurant puts out a few cases of the unwinding Bud each night and pushes the sale of less popular brands to latecomers.

Jim Mousmoules at Jeff's Campus Confectionary jerked a thumb at 26 cases of Bud (to Chapel Hill Weekly reporters Rick Nichols and John Martin) which he had stacked behind his counter like trophies.

"Chapel Hill will never run out of beer," he claimed.

Most beer outlets in Chapel Hill are reporting normal sales or only slight increases.

Tommy Gardner at Quik Food Mart said Bud and Schlitz are moving a little faster than usual for summer. He's stocked up a little, but the distributors don't let you stock up too much, he noted.

At the Keg Room, Tommy Mariakakias said big brand distributors have got enough stock for three or four weeks.

"We haven't had any trouble," said Vance Hogan of Fowler's, "yet." Keg beer is not being distributed to stores for parties and such, however.

Bay Gas Station reports a five-week supply of Schlitz and Miller Highlife. Pizza Villa is hanging in there, but rationing Bud.
