

AF Officers' Qualifying Test Upcoming

By BOB ARRINGTON
DTH Staff Writer

The Air Force Officers Qualifying Test will be given Sunday, Nov. 16, in the Caldwell Hall annex, UNC Air Force ROTC. Cadet Commander Michael Sheen announced Wednesday.

"This test is for people interested in our two-year program," he said. "Most of them will probably be sophomores, but they don't have to be. Anyone with two years of college work remaining is eligible for the two-year plan.

"Graduate students and law students can join under these rules. Most people probably don't know this."

Sheen compared the test to college board examinations.

"The test is extremely comprehensive," he noted. "It's probably the roughest aptitude test you'll ever take. Certainly, it's one of the best rounded; it has current events, history—even some music. You might say it could be compared to the college boards or maybe to the law SAT."

Is it too difficult for most people?

"Not at all. Most of the people who will take it are good students anyhow."

Sheen said most people are interested or fun. He singled out the pilot's aptitude part as an example.

"There they will be shown approach photographs and asked to tell which way the plane is going. Another section of the test will ask similar questions dealing with navigation."

What happens after the test?

"Well, there's no obligation in taking the test. Those whose scores are satisfactory and who are still interested will be given a physical examination later on. They'll also be interviewed by some of the cadets and the Air Force officers here.

"If they decide to join Air Force ROTC, they'll go to a six-week field training program next summer. Even then, there's no obligation. In fact, there's none until they're sworn in next fall."

Sheen said once registered in the Professional Officers Course AF-ROTC members are considered Air Force reservists and receive $50 per month plus uniforms and other equipment.

Cadets may also learn to fly and earn their private pilot's licenses, Sheen said.

Those interested in that aspect of the program can see Flight Instructor Program chief Bob Honeycutt on the eighth floor of Granville.

The qualifying test will be given again Dec. 14.
