State Gets Loan For Bald Head

RALEIGH-Gov. Bob Scott said today a non-profit nature organization had agreed to lend the state $5.5 million to purchase Bald Head Island but the owner would not negotiate.

Scott told a news conference that Edward Kingman, vice president of the Nature Conservancy of Washington, D.C., was "happy to respond" to the request which would block the sale of the controversial island to a High Point group interested in

The governor said he was informed by the island's owner, Frank Sherrill of Charlotte, that as long as Carolina Cape Fear Corp. had the option to purchase the island he was not in a position to negotiate with the state.

Conservationists have argued that the island, located at the mouth of the Cape Fear River, should be retained in its natural, unspoiled state.

Committee Considers Douglas Charges

WASHINGTON-Chairman Emanuel Celler announced today his House Judiciary Committee would consider impeachment charges against Supreme Court Justice William O. Douglas. The maneuver could sidetrack an anti-Douglas effort by a bipartisan. conservative bloc.

Celler said that he would convene his committee Tuesday to "chart our future course" in the Douglas matter.

The strategy of the veteran liberal Democrat was seen as a parliamentary tactic which could stall further efforts by about 100 Republican and Democratic critics of Douglas who want an investigation by a specially selected six-man panel.

The decision on an open policies for the Consolidated house policy for next year has University have in the past been brought one step closer to come under the consideration completion, according to a of a board consisting of the spokesman for the Chancellor. chancellors of all six campuses.

Assistant to the Chancellor All the changes in the Clairborne Jones said Thursday present open house policy the Committee on University recommended by CURL must Residential Life (CURL) be applicable to the other five through Christ," he continued, recommendations on the open campuses. house policy were submitted Chancellor J. Carlyle Sitterson to the Administrative Board of Student Affairs (ABSA) for consideration.

The ABSA, chaired by Dean of Student Affairs C.O. Cathey, will advise Sitterson as to the acceptability of the CURL recommendations.

According to Dr. Jones, the submission of the recommendations to ABSA is the usual procedure for such matters concerning policy changes of this nature.

The board has no "decision" power and will serve only as another "input" in the decision process, noted

CURL chairman Dr. John Schnorrenberg said Sitterson agreed to discuss the recommendations with members of CURL before making a recommendation to Consolidated University President William Friday.

President Friday will consult with members of the student body before a final decision is made on the open house policy for next year, according to Student Body President Tommy Bello.

McDowell, during his speech and afterwards in small discussion groups, said justice, peace and love cannot be achieved by merely changing social structure or government.

"Che Guevera (a Cuban revolutionary) wanted people to love one another," McDowell said. "The trouble is that can't be achieved by changing the social structure, whether you change it to communism, socialism or

"Peace has to be achieved "and within the individual."

McDowell said there was one ever asked him during his America-whether violence was necessary for meaningful change in South America.

"As a Christian," he said, "I can't condone violence. But, boy, it sure makes you wonder in the case of South America.

"After thinking about it though, you realize that all lasting advances have been made through peaceful revolution. The violent ones either cause conditions to worsen, although the leaders are different, or the improvements don't last." McDowell said his group, the Campus Crusade for Christ, International, was growing "at a fantastic rate."

He said the group "will infiltrate every momement in the world and turn them into forces which will make governments deal justly with the people."

McDowell's last speech on campus will begin at 9 tonight in rooms 202-204 in the Student Union. The talk is entitled "Resurrection and Revolution."
