Independent School Sets Weekend Pop Festival

By Mary Burch
Arts Editor

There will be a pop festival this weekend—not like the Miami Pop Festival, or Woodstock, or even Jubilee. This pop festival will have a purpose in addition to the fun and music—to raise funds for the Chapel Hill Independent School.

The Independent School is an experiment in education, begun last September by Robert Kimzey, a former principal at the N.C. Schools of the Arts. The purpose of the school is to provide an atmosphere for individual study—to discover a student's interests and aims and provide courses which will stimulate and develop his creativity and knowledge.

Freedom could be the motto of the school. The students and faculty decide together what and how they will study. There are no grades and no pressures as with institutionalized education. "During the pop festival, we will try to incorporate the atmosphere conveyed at the school," said student Bruce Filley, one of the organizers of the festival. "We will encourage each person who attends to participate as freely as he wishes in the crafts and the music."

The three-day festival will be held on a 60-acre farm, nine miles southwest of Chapel Hill, on Jones Ferry Road. Those who attend the festival may camp on the grounds for the weekend.

Music will be provided by 25 groups or individual performers who have volunteered their talent. The performers include "The Organ Grinders" from Baltimore, Md.; "The Wild Fire" from Columbia, S.C.; "The New Deal String Band" which includes "The Ace Horn Band" from Charlotte; Jim Wann, a well-known student folk singer; and "The Brother-hood," a group which is now performing at the New Establishment.

"We are hoping that Mike Seeger, the son of performer Pete Seeger, will be able to come down from Washington, D.C.," Filley said. "He said he would like to come if he doesn't have a previous commitment."

The food for the weekend will be provided by the UNC cafeteria workers. "We have turned all of the food operations over to the workers to help them raise money," Filley said. "The Free University in Raleigh will be providing cokes and popcorn."

Festival tickets are now on sale at $5 for the three days, $3 for Saturday and Sunday, or $2 for Sunday alone. All of the proceeds will go to the school to provide needed supplies and scholarships for the students.

The school is set up as a non-profit corporation. Most of the students pay $1,000 in tuition per year. Kimzey has applied to several foundations for grants to continue and expand the school.

"The purpose of the festival is, of course, to raise money," Filley said, "but the emphasis of the festival will be on free expression, through the music, the crafts and the people."
