

Dean Of Women's Office Restructured

Sources close to the administration said that the move putting Cansler in the associate dean of student affairs job was intended to groom him for eventually taking over dean of student affairs when Dean C.O. Cathey retires.

But at least one high administrative source said there are no plans for any line of succession now.

The explanation for the new office was that Dean Cathey now has 13 separate organizations under his direct control and could not devote any time to these if he were to handle the reorganization of the administration himself.

The money for the new positions is coming this year from discretionary funds. Next year funds appropriated by the state will finance the positions.

DEAN CARMICHAEL

Robinson: Too Early To Note Violations

such persons that they would not be prosecuted for violation of the policy.

For those persons not responding to the first letter, the second letter warned: "Under these circumstances (having not responded to the first letter), we must assume that you intend to not disqualify your original declaration that you personally engaged in conduct to violate the Trustee's disruptions policy."

The letter closed with the following warning: "If you do not respond, appropriate administrative action will be taken."

When asked about the nature of the "appropriate administrative action", Robinson said the nature and degree of the action has yet to be determined.

"The closing statement was used in order to give people an incentive to reply in some form to the letter," he explained.

Although the letter clearly states that students engaging in peaceful protest would not be prosecuted, Robinson was unsure about the fates of those who ran through buildings disrupting classes

"I can't say anything about such cases until all the replies are in and the extent of disruption determined," he noted. "It's too early to make any sort of statement about who will or will not be charged in such instances."

Dean of Student Affairs C.O. Cathey was questioned about the letter and responses Tuesday, but declined comment

Robinson told the Tar Heel Wednesday that further comments on the investigations should come from the administration here "because they are conducting the investigation, and we merely receive the results of their findings and determine probable cause for prosecution."

In contrast, Dean Cathey said Tuesday that official statements about the investigation should come from the office of the Consolidated University, because of President William Friday's past statements to the press about the issue.

"We probably won't have any further information about the investigation until after the June 26 deadline for responses to the second letter," Robinson concluded.

Visitation

of Carr held house meetings and adopted the visitation agreement.

Dean of Women Catherine Carmichael said Wednesday that no women's dormitories would have visitation this weekend.

"It is my impression, since there are girls here from 16 to 60, that most of the houses will not be interested in visitation in this summer heat," noted Dean Carmichael.

'We'll Swing Bats To Bust Pushers'

In North Carolina, no conclusive survey has rendered an answer to the severity of the drug problem in the black community, but observations and experiences show that drug addiction has gotten a "shot in the arm" here recently.

One Baptist church in Harlem, headed by the Rev. Oberia D. Dempsey, has hung a warning poster outside their door reading:

LAST WARNING TO ALL DOPE PEDDLERS AND GANSTERS

Black-White-Puertorican Get Out of Harlem and N.Y. City

we are going to return Harlem back into the hands of decent people.

In Durham and Raleigh, black radio stations WSRC and WLLE constantly run public service announcements describing the hard world of a junkie. The rap usually ends by saying, "If you have watched a friend suffer from dope, call in the name of his supplier to the local authorities. Your name will never be used. HELP A JUNKIE BUST A PUSHER!"

"Your Own Thing Theater" in Durham has also been the scene of a community education program on drugs. According to Howard Fuller, director of Malcolm X University in Durham, "The use of dope must be stopped if we are to go about the business of black liberation."

Some community groups in New York believe that breaking the physical need for heroin plus providing strong psychological alternatives will help cure addicts.

Another possibility is the use of methadone. Although addictive, it is suppose to allow a person to function on a job and in other functions. However, many fear that this will create a fight to control addiction rather than eliminate it.

In New York City last year 224 teenagers died from overdoses or heroin-related infections. More than 40 have already died this year.

A Washington, D.C. white woman, who has a 23-year-old son hooked on heroin, revealed that there are 1,200 white youths registered as addicts in her county.

Some young dope fighters show no mercy for the pusher. To them they are not going to be allowed to stand around street corners setting a bad example for their younger brothers and sisters. "For everyone we find, we'll use a bat to break their arms and legs which transports the business," they say.
