University Faces Investigation

By TONY LENTZ
From the Chapel Hill Weekly

A federal official confirmed this week that the University will be investigated "sometime in the next few months" to determine if UNC is in violation of federal guidelines against sex discrimination.

Federal funds coming to the University could be delayed if the investigation reveals discriminatory practices in hiring or if HEW determines that restrictions placed on women in UNC admissions is de facto discrimination.

The grants and contracts in question involve millions of dollars. In 1968, for example, UNC at Chapel Hill received nearly $22 million in federal funds.

UNC President William C. Friday said Tuesday he had received no notice of any complaint.

"I will have no comment until I am notified of a complaint."

Robert Smith, acting director of public affairs with the Department of Health, Education and Welfare in Washington, said Monday a complaint against the University had been filed by the Women's Equity Action League (WEAL).

"They've made complaints against a large number of colleges and universities," Smith said. "We will be getting around to many of these schools for compliance reviews in the next few months."

The complaints, he said, will be handled under normal HEW review procedures.

"I can't be specific on the timing because a schedule for the next quarter has not been completed yet. But I can safely say that we will review the complaint against the University of North Carolina within the next several months."

The investigation, Smith said, would center on University hiring practices.

"I want to emphasize that the admission of students on the basis of sex is not and has never been under the jurisdiction of any federal agency. In other words, we have absolutely no jurisdiction on student admissions."

A WEAL officer, however, said the women's rights group would contend that discrimination in admissions was, in effect, discrimination in hiring.

Dr. Bernice Sandler, chairman of the WEAL Federal Contract Compliance Committee, said this week that women who could not get college degrees were thereby denied college teaching jobs.

"We are making the point that college admissions is similar to the apprentice programs set up by labor unions. They control their own labor market by controlling those who can be trained for the jobs. It's really beautifully analogous to the apprenticeships."

WEAL lawyers, she said, had determined that the contention was backed strongly by precedent in the courts.

"We have the precedent set on the (Continued on page 5)

Franklin St. Off Limits To Peddlers

Chapel Hill's flower ladies and young street peddlers received a surprise from the town's Board of Aldermen Monday night when a new sidewalk ordinance was passed restricting who can sell what and where.

The flower ladies, who previously sold their goods free, now must pay a $10 privileged license fee, according to Andy Little, assistant to Mayor Howard Lee.

This payment will be assessed against each lady for the use of no more than a 10 foot-wide space on the sidewalk. This annual license fee must be paid by Wednesday afternoon.

Other sellers weren't so lucky. Starting Tuesday morning, they were issued copies of the new ordinance and told to close shop. A candle seller was stationed on Franklin Street as this reporter drove up main street Tuesday afternoon.

Old And New Establishments Have It Out

By Vesta Manning

"The old establishment has declared war on the 'New Establishment,'" declared David Bratten, owner and manager of Chapel Hill's most visited bar.

In the past month, charges have been brought against Bratten and his employees for personal and administrative violations while under the jurisdiction of the New Establishment (NE).

The Alcoholic Beverage Control Board first issued a written warning to NE on January 8, 1970 against allowing beer to be sold to minors. At this particular time Bratten said he was not in Chapel Hill.

Bratten was issued a warrant by ABC officers on June 5, including a number of charges for different dates. Incorporated in the warrant were the following:

May 23, Bratten was charged with disorderly conduct, specifically, "vile and profane language";
2-Bratten was intoxicated;
3-Bratten was charged with interfering and not cooperating with the Chapel Hill police officers. On May 29 & 30, -Employees charged with consuming intoxicating beverages; 2-NE permitted and allowed the outlet of beer at 12:05 A.M.; 3-NE allowed intoxicated persons to loiter and consume beer on NE premises.

McMillen Finally Signs Grant-In-Aid At UNC

By Bobby Nowell

Tom McMillen of Mansfield, Pa., the most heralded high school cager since Lew Alcindor, announced Wednesday his intention to enroll at the University of North Carolina.

The 6-11 frontcourt man had been touted by over 100 schools offering grants-in-aid. McMillen's decision ended a dramatic two-month deliberation, which began when his Mansfield High team wrapped up the Pennsylvania Class B state championship. McMillen telephoned UNC

Coach Dean Smith late Tuesday night to reveal that he had decided to become a Tar Heel.

Last April, shortly after the close of the high school season, Smith was summoned to Elmira, N.Y., for a press conference at which McMillen (Continued on page 10)
