

Students Have Chance To Work With Retarded

The Murdoch Committee this year will again offer students a chance to work with mentally retarded children.

The committee, which works through the YMCA and YWCA, consists of student volunteers who work at Murdoch Center, a state home for the mentally retarded.

The committee's service has been reorganized this year. There are now four areas of service: recreation, teaching, child management and special aid, which involves proficiency in a field such as nursing or physiotherapy.

Areas in which students can participate include: working directly with the cottage parents in the cottages, working in the children's psychiatric unit, working in the Unit for Blind and Multihandicapped, working as teachers' aides or child management training and instruction in industrial arts and arts and crafts.

Products of the Murdoch Center include the red, blue, yellow, green and white barrels displayed by the Y in Activities Mart and at the Y's Rencontre du Monde during orientation week.

Students should go the Y for more information about the center.

News In Brief Around The Campus

UNC News Bureau

Research and training grants awarded to UNC have climbed to more than $29 million, according to UNC's Dean of Research Administration George R. Holcomb.

The $29,023,051 awarded UNC during 1969-1970 is a 5 1/2 per cent increase over the $27.5 million awarded the previous year. It included research grants and contracts totaling $18,772,051 and training grants totaling $10,251,000.

The state's only American Medical Association approved School of Radiation Therapy Technology will graduate its first class here today.

The school, located in the Division of Radiation Therapy at N. C. Memorial Hospital, offers a year of intensive training in the use of modern radiation therapy equipment.

The graduates, Karen Tucker and Calvin Wilson, are qualified to assist the radiation therapy physician in treating cancer patients with such equipment as Cobalt, Betatrons, Linear Accelerators and Treatment Simulators.

The School of Business Administration will launch a unique program for the younger executive this spring called the Young Executives Institute.

The five-week program is designed to provide advanced management training for younger administrators in manufacturing firms and service industries.

Dr. Richard Levin, professor of Operations Management, will direct the institute. Enrollment is open to executives, 26-35, with five years managerial experience and a college degree.

Nathan Hershey, research professor or health law, will give a banquet address at the Oct. 8-9 Conference on Community Health Care in the Carolina Inn.

A professor in the Schools of Public Health and Law at the University of Pittsburgh, Mr. Hershey will speak on "Are Health Professions Becoming Obsolete?"

The meeting in Carrington Hall is open to the public.

Dr. Christoph E. Schweitzer has assumed his duties as chairman of the UNC Germanic Languages Department.

The Berlin native replaces Dr. Herbert W. Reichert, who will begin a four-month leave of absence Feb. 1 to complete two research projects.

Prior to joining the UNC faculty, Schweitzer taught at Yale, University of Wisconsin, University of Colorado, and served as chairman of the German department at Bryn Mawr.

Dr. Frank Golley of the University of Georgia will discuss "Principals of Environmental Planning" in a seminar Thursday at 11 a.m. in room 201, Coker Hall.

He is executive director of the Institute of Ecology and professor of zoology at the University of Georgia.

Wives of international students and faculty at UNC will be guests of honor at a 10 a.m. coffee today at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Rupert Hanny, 411 Clayton Rd. in Chapel Hill.

The coffee will initiate the seventh year of the English Conversation Class for nearly 50 foreign wives. For transportation call Mrs. Donald Hayman, chairman of the class, at 967-3381.

Professor Wins Poetry Award

Dr. William Hardy of the UNC English department received the 1970 Lamont Poetry selection for his book, "Treasury Holiday."

This award has been given annually for 17 years by the Academy of American Poets to an author of a first book.

UNC's Department of Botany will hold its first seminar on Monday, Oct. 5, at 4 p.m. in Room 201, Coker Hall.

The seminar, entitled "The Corn Blight-Helminthosporium Maybys versus Homo Sapiens", will be conducted by UNC Botany Professor Paul C. Mangelsdorf.

Dr. Floyd A. Fried, a highly regarded surgeon from the University of Chicago, has joined the UNC School of Medicine's Department of Surgery as associate professor of surgery and chief of the Division of Urology.

Fried has also conducted intensive investigations into some areas of urology for which he received a U.S. Public Health Service grant and a Scheweppe Research Fellowship.

Nearly 300 North Carolina elementary, secondary, and university modern language instructors will meet for a conference beginning Saturday, Oct. 3, at the Carolina Union.

The conference, a joint annual meeting for N.C. chapters of the American Associations of Teachers of French, German, Spanish, and Portuguese, will begin with registration at 9 a.m. and end with a luncheon at Chase Cafeteria.

Dr. Jacques Hardre, a UNC French professor, was the only United States representative to attend a meeting of the Executive Council of the International Federation of Teachers of French last week in Menton, France.

Hardre, who also helped to found the Federation, has been on the UNC faculty since 1941 during which time he has been chairman of the UNC Department of Romance Languages and president of the American Association of Teachers of French.

poetry but a tentative record of a subject that is likely to change. He wants to "do what I can't."

Producing poetry is a lengthy process, he said. Hardy is still working on a poem which he started in April, 1964, plus he has eight more volumes to go in "Looms."
