

Young Socialists Recruiting Here

by Jessica Hanchar
Staff Writer

A national committeeman from the Young Socialist Alliance (YSA) is on campus today as part of an organizational tour for the avowedly revolutionary socialist youth organization.

Frank Boehm, the committeeman, said his purpose was to visit local chapters, speak to the groups and round up members for the YSA convention in New York in December.

FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover recently described YSA as the "fastest-growing, and now the largest, radical organization in the country," Boehm said.

"Hoover was right," he added. The New York resident said of his group, "We want to win people, through education and action, to the socialist consciousness."

"One way to do that," he said, "is through massive individual political action in the streets as well as through the educational process."

He said YSA, formed in 1960, was one of the main builders of the antiwar movement and now is backing the Female Liberation and the black movements.

"Material conditions cause people to become socialist," said Boehm, "not a situation in the mind. The evidence of the decadence of capitalism is a factor that radicalizes people."

"YSA tries to bring the radicals together and to the socialist conscience, he said.

He estimated YSA's national membership at just under 5,000. "Relative to the level of radicalization, no other group comes near the size and scope of YSA," he said.

"No other group has penetrated the South as we have," he added. "Considering the level of radicalization in the South, the number of campus chapters we have is quite good."

YSA is a multi-national organization. "In order to make a revolution, it is crucial to build a world wide organization," he said.

"Our main purpose is to establish socialism in the United States, but we also want to unite with our co-thinkers around the world." Boehm leaves for Atlanta this afternoon. After visiting colleges and other organizations there, he will travel through the South and the West Coast.

Sex Discussion Set Tonight

Three UNC doctors will moderate a panel discussion on sex education tonight in the Great Hall of the Student Union at 7:30.

The doctors, Dr. Takey Crist, Dr. Joseph DeWalt and Dr. William Eastman, will explain sex education procedures on campus. They also will explain the Student Infirmiry policy on contraceptive information and devices.

The panel discussion will be followed by a question and answer period.

The sex education symposium is being sponsored by the Association of Women Students (AWS).

"The purpose of the symposium is to get people asking more questions," said Mary Vallier, president of AWS.

Don't smoke Big Red.

Big Red won't smoke. No matter how much he looks like a fat cigar. His thing is to write. He's a pen. And inside that funky red case, he's all heart. With lots of ink. And a big soft tip that writes like he means what he says. On walls, or foreheads, or balloons, or even paper. When he does run dry, you refill him with a cartridge. Big Red from Parker, yet. Take all of him for $5. Give him and cause a furor. Just don't put him down near an ashtray.
