

As Heels Shock Maryland

'Terps Blase,' McKinnon Says

by David Zucchini

ACC soccer history repeated itself Monday afternoon in College Park when Carolina upset perennial league kingpin Maryland, 3-2, thereby handing the Terps only their second conference defeat since the ACC was formed in 1952.

It was the Tar Heels who tagged Maryland with its first ACC loss, as they burned the Terps, 2-1, last year, depriving Maryland of the league crown for the first time in history.

Senior inside forward McKay McKinnon was by far the Terp's biggest pain Monday, as he scored all three Tar Heel goals, two of which came on assists from fullback Tim Morse and forward Dave Feffer.

McKinnon, a zoology major from Wadesboro, was elated over the Carolina win.

"It would be superfluous to say that I'm extremely excited," he said. "It was a great thrill for all of us and a big part of our season in that it made up for a lot of our previous disappointments."

McKinnon was referring to Carolina's disappointing 1-1-2 conference record, which includes crucial ties with N.C. State and Clemson. Only against Maryland, he believes, did the Tar Heels finally put everything together.

"Our team has the potential to be truly great, and against Maryland we reached that potential," he explained. "We had mediocre efforts against State and Clemson, so it was really satisfying to accomplish all this with a concentrated effort by everyone."

The question that immediately comes to most people's minds is how the Tar Heels, who have had only so-so conference records the past two seasons, have been able to knock off the Terps, while other teams with better ACC slates have not.

McKinnon, who was a two-year soccer letterman at New Hampshire's Phillips Exeter Academy, offered his explanation of this phenomenon.

"Since we know Maryland is such a fine team, we realize that a great effort is necessary to beat them. As a result, we respond with our best efforts when playing them."

McKinnon, who has started at forward for the Tar Heels since his sophomore year, was somewhat perplexed by the fact that Maryland was not quite as revenge-minded as Carolina had anticipated.

"They were pretty blase against us last year, so this year we naturally expected them to really come out after us. For some reason they didn't, and an inspired team effort on our part was what beat them."

Since he had scored only once prior to Monday's game, McKinnon was understandably a bit surprised and pleased with his three goals against Maryland.

"Some days are just made to be like that," he conceded. "I hadn't had a good day before that, so I was due. A lot of it can be attributed to good luck and simply being in the right place at the right time."

Looking back over the nearly completed 1970 schedule, McKinnon views the season as a success for both himself in particular and the Tar Heels in general.

"Although I came out late for the team, I feel that this has been a good year for me. The team has been successful and although there have been many sacrifices, they've been worth making. I've enjoyed it tremendously."

The Tar Heels will close out their season Friday in Durham against Duke and McKinnon believes that the Maryland win greatly enhances Carolina's chances of stopping the Blue Devils, who have whipped UNC the past two years.

"Last year they caught us still thinking about our win over Maryland, and the year before we were concerned with a possible NCAA bid and were caught looking ahead," McKinnon revealed. "They won't catch us doing that this year. We'll be ready."

You can bet your Duke football ticket on that.
