

All-ACC voters shun Tar Heels

Dooley, Hoolahan angry

By Chris Cobbs
Sports Editor

This year's All-Atlantic Coast Conference football team lists only three members of Carolina's Peach Bowl-bound Tar Heels—and Coach Bill Dooley is very unhappy about the situation.

"It's a mystery to me how the newsmen can vote only three of our players on an all-star like this while picking six Wake Forest and five Duke men," said the Tar Heel coach.

Only UNC representatives on the squad, selected by 83 members of the ACC Sports Writers Association, are tailback Don McCauley, offensive tackle Paul Hoolahan and defensive tackle Flip Ray, all seniors.

"We felt like we finished the season stronger than any other team in the conference," said the irate Dooley. "What's more, we led the ACC in rushing offense, total defense and rushing defense."

The Tar Heel boss was unhappy that only one member of both the offensive and defensive lines was included on the all-star team, in view of the statistical domination achieved by these forward walls.

Missing from this year's all-star is guard-linebacker Bill Richardson, honored for his play as a junior in 1969.

and twice selected defensive player of the week by the sports writers during his senior campaign.

"I think this points up the need for a new voting system," continued Dooley. "Something has got to be wrong when players the caliber of Richardson don't make the team."

"We thought that both Richardson and another of our linebackers, John Bunting, were as good as any linebackers in the conference."

Named as the all-league linebackers were Duke's Dick Biddle, Wake Forest's Ed Stetz and N.C. State's George Smith.

Stetz, ringleader in the Deacon defense, was joined by tackle Win Headley as representatives of the Wake defensive platoon.

Other members of the conference champions chosen for all-conference recognition were quarterback Larry Russell, fullback Larry Hopkins, guard Bill Bobbora and kicker Tracy Lounsbury.

Duke players cited in addition to Biddle were end Wes Chesson, quarterback Leo Hart, and safety Rich Seal.

"I am sorely disappointed at the writers' choices," said Dooley.

"I don't understand how you can omit senior linemen like our Tony Blanchard, Keith Hicks, Ron Gzykowski and Jim Hambacher from strong consideration," he went on.

"I don't think there was any question that we had the finest offensive line in the conference, but you would never know it to look at the all-league team."

UNC Sports Information Director Jack Williams said that he intends to propose to the Sportswriters Association at its spring meeting that SID's be banned from future voting. "Every publicity office has two votes and I don't think it's fair to the players, the way the current system tends to operate," he said.

Carolina tackle Hoolahan, a 225-pounder from Pt. Lookout, N.Y., indicated his displeasure with the selections by saying, "I'm bitter and disgruntled about the whole thing...if anybody heard me talking this way they would think it was sour grapes but that's the way I feel."

"You would certainly think that Richardson would be picked again, since he made the team last year and had such a great season this year."

"I played against Ed Stetz of Wake Forest and I don't really respect him that much, although he got a big buildup from the coaches over there."

"I know one of our guards should have made team, without question, but the political strings apparently kept them off it."

UNC coaches made right bowl move

By Mark Whicker

When Peach Bowl official George Crumley called UNC athletic director Homer Rice late Saturday afternoon with an official invitation, Rice was in no mood to be choosy.

Liberty Bowl scouts wanted Carolina to delay their decision until after the LSU-Tulane game Saturday night, but Rice accepted the Peach bid, setting up a meeting with undefeated Arizona State in Atlanta December 30.

Although LSU beat Tulane, the Liberty Bowl invited the Green Wave anyway.

"We felt that is we made any delays," assistant coach Vic Spooner said, "the Peach Bowl might invite somebody else. So we took what we could get."

It proved to be the right decision. Head Coach Bill Dooley had told each coach to contact the players beforehand to get their reaction to possible bowl invitations.

All the players voted affirmative on Friday.

However, some of them reportedly had second thoughts about waiting until the end of December to make the Atlanta trip. The Liberty Bowl will be played December 12, a week from Saturday.

"The Peach Bowl is a good game, and Atlanta's a good town to play in," said all-ACC tackle Paul Hoolahan Monday afternoon.

"But I understand some of the players would have rather gone to Liberty Bowl because the season would be over quicker."

"A lot of us have been falling behind on our work in school, and so we wait until the season's over to get in our Sunday punch with the books," Hoolie continued.

"This cuts into some of the players' holiday season, and drags out the season a little further, especially for the red-shirts and second team members who might not get to play in the game."

Hoolahan said that the seniors have been requested by Dooley to lead the team in workouts this week.

"It's good for the seniors that we're going to this bowl," he said. "We've been working in this direction since we were all sophomores."

Second-string tackle Reid Lookabill felt that the Dec. 30 game would help him in completing his schoolwork.

"A lot of guys on the team have got a lot of papers and quizzes between now and Christmas," Lookabill said, "and we'll need that time to get it done. I think most of the guys were happy with the Peach Bowl decision."

Spooner and Ron DeMelfi will go to Arizona this weekend to scout their Atlanta opponent.

"Arizona State has averaged six touchdowns a game for the last three years," said DeMelfi. "They're a great offensive team and a good defensive team."

"Certainly they're underrated, because they've won 15 in a row and aren't ranked among the top three or four teams in the country," said Hoolahan.

"They're bitter because they're not getting the national attention. I read that they sent eleven live chickens to Georgia Tech after Tech turned down the Peach bid in favor of the Sun Bowl bid."

"They're a bunch of hungry people."
