UNC refuses town contribution

by Charles Jeffries
Staff Writer

Each year the University contributes to the Chapel Hill town budget to help pay for police, fire, garbage disposal and disposal services received from the town. This year the University has refused to increase its contribution despite increases in the town's operating costs.

Vice Chancellor Joe Eagles informed the town manager Robert Peck of the University's decision and said, "We have never been bound by any formula, and we have no obligation to contribute any specific amount. We have reviewed the situation and have notified the town that we do not wish to increase our contribution this year."

Peck said he had budgeted the University's contribution at the same percentage figures as in the past. However, due to increases in operating costs and the general growth of the town, the total amount ran $157,133, a $19,943 increase over last year.

Peck said the percentage figures had been agreed upon by the University and the town, although there was no "scientific basis" for calculating the percentage on the services.

In the 1970-71 fiscal year, according to the town budget, the University paid 10% of the police costs ($41,877), 20% of the fire department costs ($243,137), 50% of the garbage disposal costs ($22,630), 25% of the sewer system costs ($72,190), and 40% of the disposal plant costs ($17,346) for a total of $137,190.

Eagles said he had no comment to make as to why the University would not increase its appropriation.
