"Service to the students" is the definition of duties of the Office of Student Affairs according to C.O. Cathey, the dean of the multi-function administrative division.

The range of services to which Cathey's office gives both management and budgetary guidance and supervision includes the Student Health Service, the Placement Service, the Testing and Guidance Service and the YM-YWCA. Also included under the division's responsibilities are fraternities and sororities, relations with Student Government, as well as most of the other non-academic facets of campus life.

Cathey feels the atmosphere of the campus and the entire community contributes to his efforts to help the students in the many ways that they request.

"One thing I like about this campus is its spirit of helpfulness," he explained.

The dean pointed out the contributions the 300-400 students who returned early to orient new students to the campus. These counselors helped to smooth the transition to college life for freshmen and transfer students.

He also mentioned the efforts of the

Looking forward to developments on campus in the coming year, he felt the establishment of the administrative board for the Student Health Service was a positive step.

"The board will work with the director, Dr. James Taylor, in developing innovative approaches and embellishing the quality of the service there," Cathey said.

"And I am particularly pleased that we are going to have student input in the board," he added.

Cathey also feels the students on campus will find a focus for their energies in the political arena in the coming year, especially with the interest generated in the 1972 Presidential race.

Under Dean Cathey works a large staff including Associate Dean of Student Affairs James O. Cansler, the deans of men and women, and the Office of Residence Life.

Cathey came to Chapel Hill in 1947 to join the faculty and to work for his doctoral degree, which he earned in 1948. He had graduated from Davidson College in 1928 and received his masters degree there in 1929.

He served on the faculties of Rutherford College and Brevard College before serving in the U.S. Army for five years during World War II.

"We can't always make the students happy, but we try," Cathey said in describing the difficulties his office often faces in attempting to solve many of the students' problems.

'Invisible' CU officers in charge of planning, budget

The officers of the Consolidated University are rarely seen by most of the student body on the Chapel Hill campus, but their actions have a profound effect on the quality and nature of the academic and extra-curricular life here.

Planning and budgets are among the most important areas under the supervision of the officers and staff of the Consolidated University, headed by President William C. Friday. These officers have the responsibility, of course, for all six of the campuses of the University, not just for Chapel Hill.

The headquarters for these officers and their staffs is in the new General Administration Building of the University, situated on N.C. highway 54 a quarter-mile from campus. The building, completed last May, gives both the University officers and the trustees of the University a modern and spacious office center.

The outcome of the deconsolidation issue which will face the General Assembly in special session beginning

Oct. 26 is highly important to these officers. Any radical restructuring of the state system of higher education will have an equally radical effect on their jobs.

President William C. Friday is the chief executive officer of the University and is directly responsible to the Board of Trustees of the University for the school's operations and activities. He assumed the presidency on an acting basis in 1955 and was named president by the trustees in 1956.

A graduate of North Carolina State University in 1941, Friday served as a naval officer in World War Two. He entered UNC Law School after the war and graduated in 1948.

Following graduation, he assumed the post of assistant dean of students here and in 1951 was appointed administrative assistant to the president.

Friday is presently the president of the prestigious Association of American Universities. He has served on numerous national education commissions and has been recognized as one of the outstanding university presidents in the country.

N. Ferebee Taylor is the vice president for general administration of the University. He graduated from Chapel Hill in 1942 as president of Phi Beta Kappa and a member of the Golden Fleece.

Taylor went on to graduate cum laude from Harvard Law School in 1949 and to receive a Rhodes scholarship. He earned both an A.B. and M.A. from Oxford University.

He was the partner in a New York City law firm for 12 years before he came to UNC in July, 1970 to assume his present post.

The post of vice president for academic affairs is currently vacant upon the decision of William Wells to return to teaching at Chapel Hill. The post will be filled later this fall.

A.K. King serves as vice president for institutional studies, a job he assumed in 1964. He did his undergraduate work at Chapel Hill and earned his masters and doctoral degrees from the University of Chicago.

Having served as associate dean of the graduate school and director of the summer school here, King has concentrated on the history and philosophy of education.

From North Carolina State University, the Consolidated University obtained Dr. H. Brooks James as vice president for research and public service. Dr. James has an outstanding background in economics and public service.

He served as assistant administrator of the War on Hunger of the U.S. State Department. From this post he administered international assistance programs in every part of the world.

L. Felix Joyner is the vice president for finance of the University, acting in all matters concerning finance for President Friday. Before coming to the Consolidated University, he served in numerous positions of the Kentucky state government, including his last post as Commissioner of Finance for the state.

Under Joyner serve the treasurer of the University and three other assistant vice presidents of the University.

A.H. Shepards Jr. is the treasurer and assistant vice president. A native of Wilmington, and a graduate of Davidson College, he has been a member of the UNC staff since 1932.

Assistant to Shepard is J. Sibley Dorton Jr., who also holds the title of assistant vice president and that of assistant treasurer. Also a graduate of Davidson College, he was general manager of the Roanoke Island Historical Association, which produces "The Lost Colony."

K.R. Grogan and A. Peter Winfrey III are the two other assistant vice presidents of finance for the Consolidated University. Winfrey is an expert in the field of computers and systems analysis. Before coming to his present position, he was the director of the computer system at Memphis State University and a systems engineer for IBM.

Grogan holds both a bachelor of science in business administration and a master of business administration from Chapel Hill. A certified public accountant, he served as director of accounting at UNC-G before coming to the administration of the University this past summer.

Responsibility for the multi-station University Educational television network is the duty of George E. Blair, director of University Television. A graduate of Haverford College, he holds both masters and doctoral degrees from the University of Pennsylvania.

Prior to assuming his present post in 1969, Blair was the director of education for the South Carolina Educational Television Network.

President Friday has two assistants, J.L. (Jay) Jenkins and Richard H. Robinson Jr.

Robinson was a Morehead scholar when he attended Chapel Hill and was a Root-Tilden scholar during his three years at the New York University School of Law. He was a member of the faculty of the UNC School of Law and an acting vice president of the Consolidated University until 1970 when he accepted President Friday's appointment.

Jenkins handles press relations for the Consolidated University offices. A Wake Forest graduate, he had extensive journalism experience before coming to the University in 1969. He worked for United Press International, the Raleigh News and Observer, and the Raleigh Times. He was head of the Raleigh Bureau for the Charlotte Observer and editorial page editor for the Winston-Salem Journal and Sentinel.

Straight talk about college and you

Here is a sane and sensitive analysis of college life which treats you as an adult. It throws out the college stereotypes and gets down to the subject at hand without bias.

It speaks as freely and factually of marijuana and sex as it does the blunders of the Berkeley administration during the Free Speech confrontations.

It objectively probes the factors behind such topics as Who Controls a University, racism, study pressures, loneliness and depression, sex, how to study and why the grading system may be stacked against you.

Finally, it points out that if you want to stay in college, this is the chance in a lifetime to discover yourself. You are removed from the 9 to 5 grind and the biased, if well-intentioned, family and friends who want you to fit their preconceived image.

HOW TO DO A UNIVERSITY was written by four Michigan State University professors in response to questions raised by thousands of incoming students.

One student, Barbara Hodgson of Mankato State College said about the section on mental health that she "... had felt every emotion covered in the section... not to any extreme degree, but enough to warrant concern and... to appreciate the knowledge that enough students had gone through the same thing to justify inclusion in the book."

Of course, one student reviewer doesn't make a good book. So why not leaf through it yourself at the bookstore and see what you think?
