

No matter how you go ... damn the rain

Going to class ain't bad for bikers...

Rain good for farmers, but bad for bicyclists

by Charles Jeffries
Staff Writer

Tuesday's rain not only caught UNC student Victoria Turner without an umbrella, but also caught her new bicycle without braking power.

Miss Turner, 19, of Cobb Dormitory, was speeding to her room to pick up an umbrella during Tuesday's downpour when her bike brakes failed, causing her to crash into a small wall behind Phillips Hall.

"I squeezed the brakes, but since they were wet, they didn't hold well enough to stop the bike," said Miss Turner.

Upon hitting the wall, the bicycle went over and Miss Turner followed, landing on her back. She sustained minor cuts, bruises and scrapes.

Miss Turner said someone called an ambulance as she was somewhat dazed from her landing. She praised the efforts of many of the onlookers who tried to comfort her.

"Many people held their umbrellas over me until the ambulance arrived. Someone even picked up my books and carried them to my room," she said.

Miss Turner, a sophomore from Charlotte, was released from the emergency room of N.C. Memorial Hospital shortly after she entered at 2:12 p.m.
