

A weekend justified by Tar Heel excellence

by Mark Whicker
Sports Editor

Saturday afternoon in Charlotte. Gas station attendants that take you eight miles out of the way to a place you could have made in ten minutes. The rain shows every promise of turning into what the weathermen call "frozen precipitation."

The day before, Jim McDaniels decided to leave the Cougars, asking for $50,000 for the "aggravation" of living in North Carolina. You are figuring out how much you deserve. The night before, Richie O'Connor dropped by Bucky Waters' house to become the sixth helpful Duke player to leave the program. The nausea hasn't fully abated yet from the State-Georgia Tech game.

What is anybody doing here? Only the Carolina basketball team is sure. It has convinced itself that it must play its best to beat Clemson and Georgia Tech in the North-South Doubleheader, and as a result 11,666 fans and scores of autograph hunters find something they value.

The other participants have different experiences

Clemson Coach Tate Locke seems to have built his basketball program to a place somewhere around the rating of "respectability" after two years. His team has lost by only four points to nationally-ranked Virginia and South Carolina.

But here, on Friday night, he is simply trying to endure. Referees Steve Honzo and Jim Hernjak, who are presiding over an unusually rough game between Carolina and Locke's Tigers, are having to endure Locke. The coach is berating, screaming, wincing, pacing and finally falling into his chair with helpless indignation.

As Tar Heel coach Dean Smith runs players in and out of the fray with subway rush-hour regularity, Locke has inadequate players on his bench. The ranks are thinned before his very eyes as guard Bob Hawkins gets in the way of a Bobby Jones drive and catches a foot in the adam's apple. Another guard, Bud Martin, breaks his sternum in a floor fight for the ball.

The Tigers stand resolutely in front of the onrushing Tar Heels, drawing charging fouls. They grimace with the fall, rise to rub the lacerations subconsciously, and go on with the game. One flinch, and Locke will react.

"We have the same drill," says UNC's Bill Chamberlain later. "We don't have a name for it, because we don't like to bring up the subject. You just stand there and let the man charge into you. We don't run either, because if we did we'd be running a lot on the sidelines."

After staying even for a while, Clemson falls behind Carolina, and gets pushed around as well. Locke sits rigidly, furiously. He will tell the press, through sports information director Bob Bradley, that he has no statement. He is angry with the officials, but the prevailing impression is that he is tired with trying to cope with losing.

Georgia Tech's temporary basketball resurgence is taking a year off. The Engineers are 5-15, with an upset of Georgia remaining the season's high point.

Coach Whack Hyder, in his 21st season, is not one of the country's winningest coaches, and has accepted his place. He carries a perpetual expression of resignation on the bench. He knows this doubleheader will not hold any unexpected ecstasies.

After his team aces State in a demonstration of how not to play basketball Friday night, Tech losing 87-70, Hyder tells the press how glad he is to be here. Tech is on the third year of a five-year North-South contract.

He reminisces. Two years ago, a 6-11 center named Rich Yunkus personally derailed both State and Carolina, and left the capacity crowd a little stunned. Last year, Yunkus beat State but was throttled by Lee Dedmon and Carolina.

Tech makes no special plans to slow UNC down Saturday night. The Tar Heels accept it gratefully and speed off to a 45-point victory.

"About the only thing we could give Carolina is our fight song," Hyder summarizes. "It would be our only significant contribution." He is seen later at a press reception in Ovens Auditorium, receiving friends in a courtly manner.

Ever since early December, when he was on Sports Illustrated's cover, State's Tommy Burleson has been a sympathetic figure. It would be tragic if he was not leading the ACC in rebounding and ahead of everyone in scoring but Barry Parkhill.

Still, he is trying. He stalks around after every foul with a hand on one hip and a frustrated frown. He has concentrated himself into a pretty good foul shooter. His gaffes are highly visible, and State Coach Norm Sloan, feeling the same disappointment, is yelling instructions at him angrily.

"Tommy's such a good kid," Sloan says. "He rooms with our 5-6 freshman, Monte Towse. One day after practice, Monte is pretty disgusted with himself and Tommy wants to encourage him. So he puts an arm way down on Monte's shoulder and says, 'Monte, you're doing good for your size.' Monte gets real mad and says that does it, that he's going to make the team no matter what."

Burleson is also too nice on the basketball court. But on Saturday, he asserts himself. The Wolfpack is using two guards and handling the ball better against Clemson, and Tiger center Dave Angel goes out with four fouls. Burleson rips replacement John Williams apart, scores 25 points, and State wins by 25.

Outside the locker room, the kids have their pencils. "Way to go, Tommy," they yell, and Burleson looks down, rakish in a gray cap, with a bemused smile.

On the statistics sheet it says, "Bill Chamberlain: eight points and four rebounds." Dean Smith says, "It's one of his best games in a Carolina uniform."

That takes in a lot of ground. Chamberlain against Maryland this year, Creighton last year, and in the NIT was a super player. But for two nights in Charlotte, he approaches earlier levels. What is intimidation? Steve Post of Tech is not allowed to move the ball anywhere by a straining, grunting Chamberlain, and the subsequent jump ball is taken by UNC. What is an assist? Chamberlain answers by whirling, shoving the ball past two Yellow Jackets from 10 feet to Robert McAdoo.

Chamberlain is taken out, with the other starters, well after the game is decided but well before its end. A UNC substitute charges but the layup goes in. Chamberlain stares at referee Jimmy Smith, making the downward motion that the basket is good. Questioning, he makes it again, and again before Smith turns away. Chamberlain sits down: one Tar Heel basket will not be recorded, and something is amiss. But his brilliant effort on the court almost made the North-South Doubleheader a triumph by itself.

First Tiger loss

Freshmen top Clemson

Lightning struck twice last week, although not at the same place.

State's freshman team, playing its second road game of the year, came to Carmichael Auditorium Monday with 10 straight victories and a voluminous array of acclaim.

Saturday afternoon in the Charlotte Coliseum, the undefeated Clemson freshman team played its second road game of the year after winning 10 straight games.

There had been a lot of talk about the Cubs going undefeated this year, proof of Tate Locke's rebuilding efforts. A Clemson player was even quoted as boasting no one would defeat them.

Again, Carolina's freshmen were the culprits in ending a winning streak.

With Don Washington and Brad Hoffman leading the way, the Tar Babies sailed past Clemson late in the first half and rolled to an impressive 88-74 win.

The battle was close during most of the first half though with the Cubs threatening to make Carolina victim number 11.

The Tar Babies were being limited to one shot a possession during the first 10 minutes, and even then was having trouble getting the ball underneath. The very confident Cubs were blocking out to perfection.

Sharpshooting Van Gregg and tall Wayne Croft were moving with ease around Carolina's defense, powering the Cubs into a 27-17 lead with 9:25 left in the first half. Clemson was showing why it whipped South Carolina's freshmen by 24 points the last time out.

Once the Cubs forged that 10-point lead, though, the Tar Babies seemed to be riled into action.

Fast-breaking and exhibiting form similar to the second half of the State battle, Carolina outscored Clemson 25-8 during the last nine minutes of the first half.

The Tar Babies did not waste time building on their 42-35 halftime lead, outperforming the suddenly cold-shooting Cubs 14-6 during the first four minutes of the final half.

Clemson did manage to move within eight points with 10 minutes remaining, but another Carolina spurt led by Hoffman and Ray Harrison finally put an end to the Cubs' hopes.

Extremely close calling by the referees hurt both teams, with Gregg picking up his fourth foul just before the half and Carolina's Ed Stahl and Craig Swanson committing their four one minute into the second half.

Each team was guilty of 22 fouls, with Stahl and three Clemson players, Russ Hunt, Doug Lowe and John Westerman all eventually fouling out.

Washington led the Tar Babies with 27 points followed by Hoffman with 23 and Harrison with 19. Hoffman also added five assists.

Croft topped Clemson's scoring with 23 points followed by Gregg with 18.

The Tar Babies hit 71 percent of their shots from the floor during the second half, 59 percent for the game, while Clemson managed a respectable 47 percent.

Carolina's freshman team is now 9-2 for the season with Clemson 10-1.

Tar Heel track team beats Clemson

Carolina track coach Joe Hilton said before Saturday's dual meet with Clemson that his Tar Heels and Clemson were "pretty evenly matched." He couldn't have made a more accurate prediction.

The Tar Heels built up an early point lead yesterday afternoon in the Tin Can and then withstood Clemson wins in the meet's last three events to squeak out a narrow 53-51 decision.

Carolina swept the first five events and seemingly had the meet wrapped up until the Tigers finished first in the 1,000-yd run, the two-mile and the mile relay to close to within two team points.

Hilton's squad captured seven of the meet's twelve events, however, and added four more second place finishes. Long jumper Hubert West paced the Tar Heels with wins in two events.

West, taking over from teammates Darryl Kelly in the triple jump, went 47-4 to win the event after earlier capturing first place in the long jump with a 23-3/4 leap.

Kelly and distance men Reggie McAfee and Larry Widgeon were in Louisville, Kentucky over the weekend to participate in the Mason-Dixon Games and did not take part in the win over Clemson.

The Tar Heels thus suffered in the distance events, losing out to Clemson in the mile, 2-mile and 1,000-yd run.

Clemson's Larry Rush won both the mile and the 2-mile in the relatively slow times of 4:20.5 and 9:27.0.

The Tigers' Frank Romero finished second in both events, well ahead of Carolina's Bill Harward and Bruce Hafemister. Wayne Jenkins of Clemson took the 1,000-yd run at 2:16.4, while Tar Heels Craig Steward (2:20.3) and Roy Helm (2:25.0) placed second and third.

Lennox Stewart's first place finish in the 600-yd run clinched the victory for Carolina, for it proved to be the last Tar Heel win of the afternoon.

Stewart, recovering from a sinus infection, streaked to a 1:12.5 clocking to finish more than two full seconds ahead of Clemson's Ralph Zungoli. Carolina's Don Wheelless placed third at 1:15.5.

UNC's early wins came in the pole vault, high jump, high hurdles and the 60-yd dash. Steady Danny Deacon took the pole vault, clearing the bar at 14-6. Teammate Cliff Edwards went 13-0 and finished third.

The Tar Heels placed 1-2 in the high jumps, where Dave Hilliard and Charles Ball jumped 6-6 and 6-4, respectively. Craig Loudy and David Hawkins gave Carolina another two-man finish in the high hurdles, as Loudy won in 8.0 and Hawkins placed second with 8.1.

Virginia beats Deacons

In ACC games Saturday, Virginia beat Wake Forest 74-67 in Charlottesville, Duke stopped William & Mary 87-69, and Maryland defeated Long Island 78-60 in Madison Square Garden.

Virginia's win kept them tied with Carolina for the ACC lead with a 7-1 league record. The Cavs had trouble with resurgent Wake, however, and Barry Parkhill, had to score 34 points to keep Virginia's chances alive.

Eddie Payne scored 22 to lead Wake Forest, which is now 1-6 in the ACC and 6-14 overall.

At Duke, the Blue Devils survived the loss of junior forward Richie O'Connor to coast past William & Mary.

Chris Redding scored 18 points and Alan Shaw pulled down 19 rebounds to lead Bucky Waters' club, now 3-4 in the

PLAYWRITING COMPETITION

Original plays by students or faculty which have not been produced may be submitted to the Playwriting Competition sponsored by the Union Drama Committee. The play can be a one-act play, happening, or full-length play with approximate running time of 1½ hours, excluding intermission. Musicals are not admissible. The script should be typewritten. Because of technical restrictions the play must have simple sets and lighting requirements. The final decision in selection of the script will be made by the Union Drama Committee in late April. For further information contact Kitty Conway, Suite A, 933-1157.

HARKNESS BALLET will perform in Memorial Hall, February 22 at 8:00 p.m.

TWIN OAKS: A COMMUNE WITH A FUTURE

Sara Elder will lecture on the concept of communal living and discuss the community of Twin Oaks, Va. in the Great Hall February 14th at 8:00 p.m.

MARY TRAVERS will appear in Carmichael Auditorium February 19th at 8:00 p.m.

COMMITTEE INTERVIEWS

Interviews for Carolina Union Activities Group Chairmen will be held on February 17, 18, 21, and 22. Applications and interview sign-up sheets are available today at the Union Information Desk. The application should be completed and returned to the Information Desk 24 hours before the scheduled interview.

PRESERVATION HALL JAZZ BAND appearing in Memorial Hall, February 15th at 8:00 p.m.

THE PHILANDERERS will appear in concert in the Great Hall Thursday, February 17 at 8:00 p.m. The concert is free and open to the public. They will do an informal performance at noon in the pit or in the snack bar in case of inclement weather.
