The Baily Tar Heel

Vol. 80, No. 137

Chapel Hill, North Carolina, Tuesday, March 28, 1972

Founded February 23, 1893

Adam & Eve may be forced to close

by Charles Jeffries Staff Writer

The A am & Eve Shop, Chapel Hill's only "love boutique," may be forced to close its doors at the end of July if the owners of the building in which it is housed make good their threats not to allow renewal of the shop's lease.

The shop, which opened last November, sells contraceptive products, cosmetics, posters, cards and books. The building is leased by Herb Holland Associates from owner Carl Smith, a candidate for the 16th District Seat in the N.C. State Senate.

According to John Quinn, director of Population Planning Associates (PPA), which operates the store, the main objection by the owners of the building

by David Eskridge

Staff Writer

Dunn to have her name placed on the Student Bar Association (SBA)

presidential ballot was denied by the SBA hour before it announced it had denied

In her complaint, Dunn had asked that either her 1.9534 QPA be rounded off to a 2.0 for the purpose of determining her eligibility for today's election or the SBA constitutional requirement of a 2.0 QPA

be delcared null and void and her name be placed on the election ballot.

She argued by charging:

"all prayers of relief to the plaintiff."

The court deliberated for more than an Honor Court Sunday night.

The request of law student Gretchen

Law court upholds

grade requirement

stems from the fact that the business is removed, but the Smiths are still offensive to them.

"We rented this building from Herb Holland Associates and were told we would be secure here as long as we did not go into the real estate business," Quinn said. "We were told we could occupy the building indefinitely as long as we paid the rent, and we have."

Quinn said they had trouble with the Smiths when they first leased the building because the Smiths said a sign they had erected did not blend with the colonial facade of the building.

"Later, after talking with Smith, he told us the main objection he had was that the store 'exploited sex.' His wife complained to him, saying the store used advertising that was offensive," said Quinn. Since then, the sign has been

She added, "I never understood why they called it the Adam & Eve Shop in the first place. I believe I read somewhere that was the name of a pornographic magazine in Sweden." When the store first opened, Phillip Harvey, president of PPA, said, "Adam & unwilling to renew the lease.

Mrs. Smith commented she and her husband had received numerous complaints from friends "as far away as Raleigh" about the nature of the

"I personally am against such exploiting of sex," she said. "I don't want the people of your age thinking we are against contraception and abortions and such, but we just don't like the way it's being handled by the Adam & Eve Shop.'

Eve is patterned after the much acclaimed 'Birds and Bees' shops found throughout Sweden. Anyone attempting to liken it, sight unseen, to the pornography shops of Denmark or Manhattan is sadly mistaken. "Rather, Adam & Eve was created to fill a void left by those who would either display the act of love in the gutter or hide it altogether in a Victorian shroud," Herb Holland said Monday he does not wish to become involved in the dispute and that the lease papers "speak for themselves." According to the lease, the shop can remain in the building no longer than the end of July. Meanwhile, the operators of the Adam & Eve Shop are contacting various people who might be influential in their attempts to change Smith's mind about not renewing the lease. "I doubt we have any legal recourse as far as eviction is concerned, and we can only hope to change Smith's mind." said

TODAY: Variable cloudiness with chance of rain; highs in the mid 60's; lows in the mid 40's; probability of precipitation 30 percent.

Al Lowenstein Tribute offered to Graham of the black students on campus. Bond was one of the Union last night long ehought to speak informally with some politics last night.

Lowenstein, a delegate representing by Susan Miller Staff Writer UNC, timidly approached the "little

The second week of the 1972 Carolina Symposium began Sunday night with a tribute to Dr. Frank Porter Graham, the former Consolidated University President and UN mediator who died last month.

Calling Graham "one of those transcendent men who are not afraid to take the first step," former New York Congressman Allard Lowenstein told an audience of approximately 1,000 people of his associations with Graham.

Lowenstein, leader of the "Dump Johnson" campaign in 1968 and now president of the Americans for Democratic Action, began the tribute by recalling his first conversation with Graham. That conversation took place during "Dr. Frank's" tenure as Consolidated University President, A furor in the N.C. Student Legislature concerning the admittance of delegates from black colleges had caused threats to be leveled against proponents of the measure. The threat was also made that Graham would man," asked his advice and told Graham 66.7 percent, who will not vote for Willis of the threats.

Julian Bond, a congressman from Georgia, stopped by the featured speakers on the Symposium panel discussing southern

That advice, Lowenstein recalled, was: "Well, I've always hoped UNC students would vote their convictions."

The motion did pass the student legislature. Lowenstein said, with none of the threats being carried out and Graham retaining his job. "The admittance of delegates from black colleges was the first major break in segregation in N.C.," he said. "It was a sign that change was coming to the South."

The tribute to Graham was not all serious, however.

"There were occasions when Frank Graham was wrong," Lowenstein said. He cited the year 1950 when Graham was beaten by Willis Smith in the Democratic primary election for the U.S. Senate.

Graham told his wife, Marion, and Lowenstein that they should both vote for Smith and stay with the party.

Lowenstein said Mrs. Graham, after listening to her husband's noble explanations of why they should vote for

"that man," said, "There are at least two people in this room, which constitutes

(Staff Photo by Tad Stewart)

Lowenstein's tribute, full of such anecdotes, showed well the fond remembrance of Graham by the people who knew him.

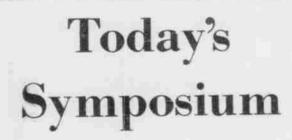

the "show of love" offered in a tribute by Congress to Graham when he retired from active duty in the UN. That tribute, made by Lowenstein, took place the day of the return of the first manned moon flight.

The former congressman reflected on Lowenstein then read the same five-minute speech he had given before the U.S. House of Representatives.

"Graham was a pioneer, inspiration to the young and disinherited, battler for justice and liberty, and above all, a man of peace," Lowenstein said, "For he too, came in peace for all mankind.

"We'll never measure up to what he was," Lowenstein continued. "The only hope is to not be afraid to take the first step, assume the risk and have that overtrust in human worth so characteristic of Frank Porter Graham."

2 p.m. - Panel on Southern Radicalism - Memorial Hall

4 p.m. - Panel on Black Prescence in the South Over the Past Thirty Years - Memorial

8 p.m. - Panel on Southern Education - Memorial Hall

- that in declaring her ineligible for office, her rights under the 14th amendment of the U.S. Constitution (i.e., the right to vote for whomever you please) had been violated:

- that the SBA constitutional grade requirement violated the Student Government constitution;

- that in this particular case, she had been treated unjustly by delaying announcement of her ineligibility for office, thereby "depriving the voters, and myself, a chance to rectify the situation."

Steve Edelstein, president of the SBA, denied all three of Dunn's charges.

Edelstein said, "I do not think the Student Bar Association's constitution is subordinate to the Student Government constitution at all. "I can only assume that we (SBA) are classified as a distinct organization since ... in the Student Constitution, there is no specific mention of the SBA." Edelstein also argued that because write-in votes are allowed in the election. Dunn and her co-plaintiffs could vote for any "eligible person on campus." Dunn chose not to appeal her case following a decision by David Crump, presiding justice of the Student Supreme Crump explained, "The most jurisdictionally competent forum to hear her case was the SBA Honor Court. There is adequate question about the relationship between the SBA and student government. We were uncertain whether we could make an appellate review of the case."

Counseling service in demand

by Ann Berman Staff Writer

The Human Sexuality Information and Counseling Service recently passed its one-thousandth call since its opening October 18, 1971.

The calls range from questions about contraceptive information and referrals to requests for programs, films and speakers.

Robert Wilson, director of the service, is very pleased with the response to the counseling service. The demand for the service has resulted in extending the hours to 11 a.m. to 10 p.m. Monday through Friday in the lobby of Suite C of the Student Union.

The service has a special phone number, 933-5505, to receive calls during these hours. The service also has a 24-hour answering service.

One of the primary assets of the service, according to Wilson, is its confidentiality. Wilson said this was an advantage over the previous options open to the students.

The main functions of the service are to provide accurate and up-to-date information on the different aspects of sexuality, to refer students to the services offered by the University community dealing with sexuality, and to talk on a one-to-one basis with students having problems in the realm of sexuality and interpersonal relations.

Almost one-fifth of the calls have dealt with the course Health Education 33, "Topics in Human Sexuality." but all but five of these calls were made within the first semester, said Wilson.

During the first six weeks of the second semester the number of calls has nearly equaled those received during the first semester, said Wilson.

One-fifth of the calls during the first six weeks of the second semester dealt with contraceptive information and referrals.

Calls about general information totaled another fifth of the calls while calls test referrals, abortion information and clinic referrals, and infections and diseases each totaled about one tenth of the calls during the six weeks. Other calls dealt with interpersonal relations and marital problems, homosexuality, physiology, research on sexuality, sexual inadequacies and requests for programs, films and speakers.

Wilson said the service was the "only university service in the nation that was organized by the students on campus that dealt not only with birth control but all phases of human sexuality."

The counselors have a complete 24-hour referral service at their disposal, said Wilson. Among the referral service dealing with pregnancy information and are seven physicians, one psychiatrist, two psychologists and one marriage counselor from the University Student Health Service along with one gynecologist from N.C. Memorial Hospital.

The service has a complete referral use for abortions across the nation including New York and Washington.

Wilson said in did not know where the students were going before the service began but the Mental Health Service was only seeing three and a half percent of the student body.

Bill Griffin, committee member, said the service was indebted to the interest of the volunteer counselors and the leadership of Wilson as well as to the Dr. Dixon.

Student Government and former Student Body President Joe Stallings for their funding and support of the service.

Dr. William Eastman of the Student Health Service said he was very impressed with the effort of the committee and felt the effort should be supported.

Associate Dean of Student Affairs James O. Cansler said, "There is a need in the University community to have more accurate information of sex and more adequate understanding of the implications of human sexuality." Cansler said it was good to have a group of persons willing to offer this service to the community, especially students related with professionals, like Dr. Eastman and Counselors 'want to help'

by Ann Berman Staff Writer

"I've had that lonely feeling, feeling that there is no place to turn and I believe there are a lot of people still like that whom I might be able to help," said one of the new counselors for the Human Sexuality Information and Counseling Service, explaining his reasons for becoming a counselor.

There are 33 counselors in the Human Sexuality program who work in two-or-three-hour shifts every week. These students are volunteers and have joined the service for various reasons.

Robert Wilson, director of the service, said the service had no trouble in recruiting volunteers for the program.

The training of the counselors involved 16 hours of instruction and role playing plus training meetings every two weeks. The student counselors in the service received training from Dr. Carolyn Dixon and Dr. William Eastman of the Student Health Service, Kay Goldstein from deal with problem pregnancies.

"Switchboard" and Dr. Mike Liptzin, psychologist from the Mental Health Service.

Students pick up information and materials in the main office in Suite C as well as ask the counselors questions. An additional room in the Union is used for private consultation between the counselor and the student.

The counselors are presently planning trips that will enable all of the referral clinics to be visited by at least two of the counselors, said Wilson. There are 23 clinics on the referral list.

The counselors are encouraged to keep up-to-date with current information and articles on human sexuality, said wilson. Bi-weekly meetings are held to discuss current business and to hear special lecturers.

George McCoy, a new counselor, said the counseling service was "filling a need for the students." He said he would like to see the service expanded to a 24-hour service. McCoy was impressed with the attitude of the outher counselors. He became interested in becoming a Of the 33 counselors, 11 are trained to counselor through an article he read in the DTH.

Kathy Cox, one of the original counselors of the service, was impressed with how far the service had come since its beginnings. As a counselor she "learned about sexuality and dealing with other people's problems on any level."

Cox said the main concern of the service now is publicity. She said "many of the students are not aware, not sure or are not interpreting the service correctly." She said "each time I answer the phone. I am more at ease." She said before the service began the students had nowhere to turn. She said there was a definite need for the service at the university.

Randy Rennolds, a new counselor, would like to see the service extended to weekend hours. He also agreed there is a need for the service in the university.

Students and faculty have long criticized the condition of the Union parking lot, but usually to no avail. The lot usually alternates between producing either dust or mud, but somebody decided a lake was too much. (Staff Photo by Tad Stewart)