

Sex counseling director says service to change

by David Klinger
Staff Writer

Robert Wilson, director of the Human Sexuality Service, foresees a gradual evolution of the service into a more efficient and helpful organization, based on its experience in the past one and one-half years.

In its brief history, the service has handled over 3,700 cases, Wilson said.

Wilson also said the service has changed since its inception as more and more students come to understand what it has to offer.

With regard to changes made during the past school year, Wilson said, "I think one major change is that we've developed a little more rapport with the students. Students are loosening up and discovering they can talk to us.

"We are here not to direct students as to right or wrong decisions, but to guide them as to the choice of alternatives available. We never try to make their decisions for them," he added.

Wilson has supervised an additional training program during the past year that has brought a more diverse group of people into the program's counseling team, including graduate students, nurses and physicians, and School of Education specialists in the field of guidance and counseling.

"Our outreach program has grown. We are speaking to more dormitories and residence hall floors. More people are calling on us, which is good," stated Wilson.

Furthermore, the orientation program for next fall is undergoing revision, with plans calling for a reduction in the service's involvement and visibility during the actual week of Orientation.

"Last year, the way they tried to work Orientation was sort of ineffective. We learned from that experience to allow the dorms to make the requests for programs from us," Wilson said.

Funding for the Human Sexuality Service has increased from last year's total of $200 to $965, with members of the group raising over $13,000 last fall.

Wilson said, "We were one of the few services that did not get cut this year. The administration, student government, and the Student Health Service have all been good to us."

One of the major projects that Wilson and his staff have devoted themselves to over the past year has been compilation and publication of "Problem Pregnancy and Abortion Counseling," a collection of various articles and references pertaining to this specialized type of counseling.

"This is the first book of its type to come out. The only books and articles that have ever come out before have related primarily to adoption," Wilson commented. He stressed that all types of alternatives to problem pregnancy are covered in this guide.

In his capacity as editor and contributor, Wilson estimates that publication of the book will finish about May 1.

Three groups seek allocation increases

by Tad Stewart
Staff Writer

Three campus organizations argued before the CGC Finance Committee Wednesday for an increase in their appropriations in the 1973-74 Student Government budget.

Representatives from the 1974 Carolina Symposium, North Carolina Student Legislature (NCSL) and the Parachute Club presented their reasons to the Committee in the third public hearing on the proposed budget.

Symposium Chairman John Crimmins requested that the $6,900 appropriated in the present budget be increased to $8,000.

Last year the Union contributed about $20,000, to help make up the difference in the Symposium's total budget of about $35,000. "We can't rely on the Union this year because of the nature of the topic," said Crimmins.

Arguing for NCSL, Geoffrey Mitchell, chairman of the UNC delegation, said that unless the appropriation is increased the delegation may fall apart.

NCSL has requested $701 to meet its expenses, an increase from the $200 presently allotted to them. Mitchell said that unless Student Government underwrote the NCSL, the high cost of the expenses may limit membership.

He said, "NCSL ought to be a Student Government activity since it is the only official way the students have to talk to the General Assembly."

Speaking for the Parachute Club, President F.J. Hale requested an increase from the present $200 to $800 to keep the club operating in the same way it did this year.

The Parachute Club needs to hire an instructor, since their club member who is certified to teach is graduating.

The club needs Student Government financial aid to help cover jumping expenses.

There will be two more public hearings, one Friday and one Sunday, for other organizations. The Finance Committee will make final decisions on all the proposals Sunday night.

McMillan speaker for Fleece tapping

James B. McMillan, federal district court judge for Western North Carolina, will be the speaker tonight at the annual public tapping ceremony for the Order of the Golden Fleece, the campus' highest honorary society.

McMillan, who is most noted for his controversial Swann v. Charlotte-Mecklenberg school desegregation decision, will speak at 7:30 p.m. in Gerrard Hall.

The public is invited to the ceremony. Following McMillan's address, the Order of the Golden Fleece will induct new members, called Argonauts according to Greek legend.

Induction into the order is open to both men and women students and is based on the highest standards of outstanding leadership and contributions to the University. Last year was the first time the order broke with tradition and inducted women.

The order, established in 1903, is the second oldest university honorary of its kind in this country. Only the Skull and Bones Society at Yale is older.

In addition to his work in the Charlotte-Mecklenberg school desegregation, McMillan has been active in court reform in North Carolina, serving on the N.C. Courts Commission from 1963 until 1971. He was president of the N.C. Bar Association in 1960-61.
