Pulley seeks end to racism

by Calvin Mercer
Staff Writer

Millions of people must be mobilized to uproot and eliminate racism, said Andrew Pulley, the 1972 Socialist Workers Party candidate for vice president, Monday night.

Pulley, now the national secretary of Young Socialist Alliance (YSA), spoke to the UNC chapter of that student socialist movement.

Racism, he said, is the basic problem of our society today. "It's more than an attitude—it goes much deeper than that," he said.

Pulley concurred with the YSA belief that blacks and other oppressed minorities are a primary target of the Nixon administration. He claimed that Nixon uses racism to focus the anger of the white masses not on the government, where it is due, but at the oppressed minorities.

In a society supposedly free and equal, the implication prevails that black poverty is caused by the "lazy, dumb and inferior" qualities of that race, Pulley said.

"This racism allows the capitalistic class to get extra profit and wealth from the oppressed," he said. "Therefore, we must do away with capitalism—the basic cause of racism."

Pulley, referring to the Republican and Democratic parties, said, "We cannot look for those who caused the problem to solve it."

The Democrats and Republicans are not trying and will not end discrimination, Pulley said, because it is not in their economic or political interest. "We must reject politically those parties responsible for racism," he said.
