

Genesis — a home for a lonely horse

by Rick Sluder
Staff Writer

Genesis House, a Chapel Hill — based drug rehabilitation center, has taken the first step toward completion of a two-and-a-half-year-old dream. After more than 30 months of financial dependence, the center has an opportunity to become self-sufficient, according to residential director John Kernodle.

Genesis House has gone into the stable business. "You can get your horse into the pasture and hay category, the pasture, hay and grain category or just about any combination you want," Kernodle said. "We have stalls, private stalls, stalls with concrete floors and stalls with running water," he added.

In addition to receiving room and board, your horse can also be trained. Or, if it's you and not your horse that needs training, riding lessons are also available from the House.

The stables are a major part of an overall self-reliance plan the Genesis House has been working on with the aid of two graduate students in the MBA program in the School of Business.

The project was made economically feasible when the residents of the House decided to raise the feed for the horses. Other crops are also raised on the center's 158 acres.

And if your fear is that your horse will be lonely among the corn stalks, fear not. Half of the pasture land is for cows.

"We don't plan to make any money on the cows," Kernodle said. "We'll just break even with them. But even if we do just break even, it'll be a good thing because somebody's learning how to raise cows."

Genesis House was started in February of 1971 by Robert J. Senior, a local pediatrician, after he noticed the citywide concern for drug users.

Campus gets black sorority

Carolina's first black sorority, Delta Sigma Theta, was officially organized on campus this past summer.

Delta Sigma Theta, Inc., is a national public service sorority first organized at Howard University in 1913. Carolina's Delta Omicron chapter presently has five inducted members and plans for sorority activities are still in the formative stages.

The sorority was created to encourage more sisterhood between black women on a predominantly white campus. Requirements for membership include a 2.5 grade average and an interest in community service.

Beetles still pests

N.C. pines die

by Rick Sluder
Staff Writer

The Southern pine beetle, a familiar pest throughout the state is continuing to kill pine trees in this county and others across the state, according to Orange County Ranger Larry Allen.

A massive effort to control the insect, undertaken last fall and winter, has prevented more extensive damage, Allen said.

"The main way to control pine beetles is to cut down the infected tree. By the time the tree is discovered, it is for all practical purposes dead anyway, even though it may remain green for a few days — like a Christmas tree when it's cut."

ACTION seeks more volunteers

Representatives of Action, the federal agency which incorporates Peace Corps, VISTA and several other volunteer programs, will be on campus the week of Sept. 10-14 recruiting for perspective applicants. The recruiters will be at the Carolina Union and the Y Court daily from 9 to 4:30 p.m. to answer questions about the program.

Students with majors in education, math, science, law, social sciences, health, business and liberal arts are needed for programs in 49 states and 60 countries.

Pine beetles kill a tree by tunneling through it, thereby cutting off the flow of nutrients from its roots.

"They usually hit mature trees that have been weakened by floods, a hurricane or lightning," Allen continued. "This before they build up a big population. They can multiply in that tree and then attack a healthy tree. If they have a big population and move onto your trees in a two acre lot, they're gone."

Last summer, beetles destroyed over 800,000 board feet of timber, or approximately $120,000 worth of trees, Allen said. This summer the largest number of trees cut down in one area was 25.

"We know we can't liquidate the problem. Pine beetles are always present. It's when they get large populations that they cause trouble. Battle Park's a good example of how they can spread like fire," Allen said.

The only preventative measures one can take, according to Allen, are to keep trees healthy or to cut the trees when they have reached full maturity.

"Of course, there are aesthetic reasons for not cutting a tree, so really there's not much defense," Allen added.

Web worms are also becoming a problem, he said. These worms form web-like nests in the forks of tree branches and defoliate the trees.

"The really don't hurt the tree, though," Allen said, "because by the time they become a problem, most of the nutrients are stored in the roots and the leaves aren't needed. They just look bad."
