

Goss quits election job

Replacement of the elections board chairman and a proposed change in the date of up-coming campus elections for Student Government offices and Daily Tar Heel editor will be the first considerations of the Campus Governing Council in the spring semester.

Tom Goss resigned his position as elections board chairman effective Dec. 18 because he received no pay.

Goss said he thinks the job deserves "financial remuneration" due to the amount of time that it requires.

Runge is in Yugoslavia, and could not be reached for comment on the possible replacement for Goss. The elections, presently scheduled for March 6, cannot be held until a replacement is approved by CGC.

The viability of March 6 as the elections date is also in question, according to Richard Liechworth, Runge's administrative assistant. If held on that date, run-offs could not be held until sometime after spring break.

Juli Tenney, student body vice-president, will sponsor a bill amending the elections laws to allow the election to be held earlier, according to Robert Hackney, CGC member.

"Rain, rain, go away," we all shouted, "come again some other day." Well, friends, that was last fall. And it did. Now we have to pay for all those days of sunshine and warm temperatures. All of which means we may be in for a super spring. (Staff photo by Gary Lobraico)

Mankiewicz to speak

Frank Mankiewicz, national political director for George McGovern's presidential campaign and author of the recently published book PERFECTLY CLEAR, Nixon from Whittier to Watergate will speak at the Wesley Foundation at 4 p.m. Tuesday. Mankiewicz's appearance is sponsored by the Bullshead Book Shop, the Wesley Foundation and the YM-YWCA.

About the book and his experience with Nixon, Mankiewicz has said: "All my adult life I've been involved with Richard Nixon."

"As a college student, when my classmates included Bob Haldeman and John Erlichman, I watched him (Nixon) destroy Jerry Voorhis in 1946."

In 1950 Mankiewicz ran for the California State Legislature on the same ticket as Helen G. Douglas. This was when he first saw what he calls "Nixon politics," but he thinks it will be known in history as "Watergate politics."

SCAU to release auto pamphlet

The fourth pamphlet for better consumer action will be released today by the Student Consumer Action Union (SCAU).

The booklet, entitled "A Guide to Automotive Repairs in Chapel Hill," is meant to help student consumers manage their automotive repairs more intelligently.

The booklet includes a number of legal clarifications concerning "fraudulent" practices by mechanics.

The pamphlet has sections on automotive service centers, dealerships, small garages and independent mechanics.

The booklet will be available in the SCAU office, Suite C of the Union, and at the Union desk for 25 cents. The cost of the booklet is to cover printing costs.

'Filling stations' become limited oases for autos

by Gary Dorsey Staff Writer

Splash, splash, gurgle: the sounds of prosperity for the gas station manager. They seem now to have been substituted with a new sound. The gas crunch.

A recent survey of local stations seems to echo the sound. Some stations have closed, some imposing 10-gallon limits, and others as the result of dropping gasoline allotments are substituting hustling employees and an emphasis on mechanical service for gasoline as a ploy to draw customers.

At the Shell station on Airport Road, the pumps flowed for 48.9 for Super Regular low-lead, and 50.9 for Super Shell. This seemed to be the going price locally.

Lenon Horton, Shell employee, said that business was "okay."

"Looks good," said Horton as he rushed out to greet a customer waiting at one of the islands.

Chuck Schroeder, a mechanic at the same station, had different sentiments towards the crunch.

Calling out from beneath the underside of a Volkswagen where he was working, Schroeder said that he felt the big companies were creating a monopoly by running the smaller stations out of business.

"The big people are trying to get rid of the little people," he said. "Some of the big companies refuse to sell to the little independent stations. For example, we get our gas from a company in Greensboro. Well, they may have been selling to these independents, but now they're cutting them back. So they go out of business."

Some of them are indeed going out of business.

The Traveler's gas station in Carrboro will be closed for the next month. It's deserted except for a note on the office door written by W.A. Davis, "proprietor."

Like many other stations in this area, notes taped to the pumps read, "Out of gas." At the Gulf station on West Franklin Street, owner Robert Summey complained that his business had not been very good either. Another sign, "Sorry no gas today. All other services available."

"We're just not getting all the gas that we want," Summey explained. "Our allotments have been cut and I'm afraid to raise prices much more or I'll lose the customers I've been trading with."

Amid all the gloom there was one gas station that seemed to be running with pumps at full throttle.

Jack Douglas, manager of the Etna station on East Franklin Street, said his business has been "real good." It was obvious. Cars were lined up at the pumps. "As a matter of fact, business would be great if I had enough gas to sell," he said.

Douglas explained he has imposed a 10-gallon limit. But his business seemed to be good despite the limit and a recent three cents a gallon increase.

The gasoline world seems to be changing. No more "filling stations." Just stations. Crunch.

McNamara named HRD coordinator

An academic coordinator for Henderson Residence College (HRC) has been appointed for the spring semester, Richard Haney, HRC residence adviser said Wednesday.

Peter L. McNamara, assistant professor of English, was selected as academic coordinator by a committee composed of six HRC officials and students. He was appointed by James R. Gaskin, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences.

Haney said HRC officials met Tuesday with McNamara to discuss residence college activities and to discuss what is expected of an academic coordinator. A meeting between HRC officials and Department of Housing officials is scheduled Thursday to explore further the precise nature of the job.

One HRC spokesman said he hopes that the coordinator will not be specifically defined by the administration but will evolve with the HRC program.

In a December statement, Donald A. Boulton, dean of Student Affairs, said the HRC academic coordinator would serve as an official liaison between students and the faculty and administration.

The coordinator would advocate student interests but probably would know in advance what plans would be accepted or rejected, Boulton said.

Boulton added that the academic coordinator would help to set up seminars, panel discussions and courses within the residence college. He emphasized, however, that he would not replace the academic adviser.

Boulton said that the selection of an academic coordinator was delayed until spring semester because officials wanted to observe HRC, speculate on its needs and determine ways for improvement.
