

Zoning change affects local gasoline dealers

by David Klingler
Staff Writer

A proposal to strengthen Chapel Hill's zoning ordinance governing service stations and one to bring non-conforming stations into line attracted local gasoline dealers to a public hearing Monday night.

The Board of Aldermen was briefed on the proposed additions to the zoning ordinance by Director of Urban Development Kurt Jenne.

"Basically the purpose of the change is to bring existing service stations with non-conforming status into conformance with current regulations," Jenne said.

The regulations govern the types of outdoor displays permitted in the front of stations and the types of business activity besides sale of gasoline conducted by station attendants.

Service stations and car care centers constructed after passage of the original ordinance in 1972 will not be affected since they meet existing guidelines.

Only those stations in operation prior to 1972 will be required to make changes in their appearance and apply for special use permits.

The proposals attracted some opposition from area service station operators, although the aldermen will rule on the changes only after further study by the Planning Board.

"A service station is a service station and there is no way you can camouflage it. Just what type of problem are you running into that you have to come up with this?" asked local Gulf dealer Earl Walker.

Both Mayor pro tem R.D. Smith and Alderman Alice Welsh advised Walker and other service station operators that the desirability of enacting regulations to improve stations' appearance had been agreed upon by the board in 1972.

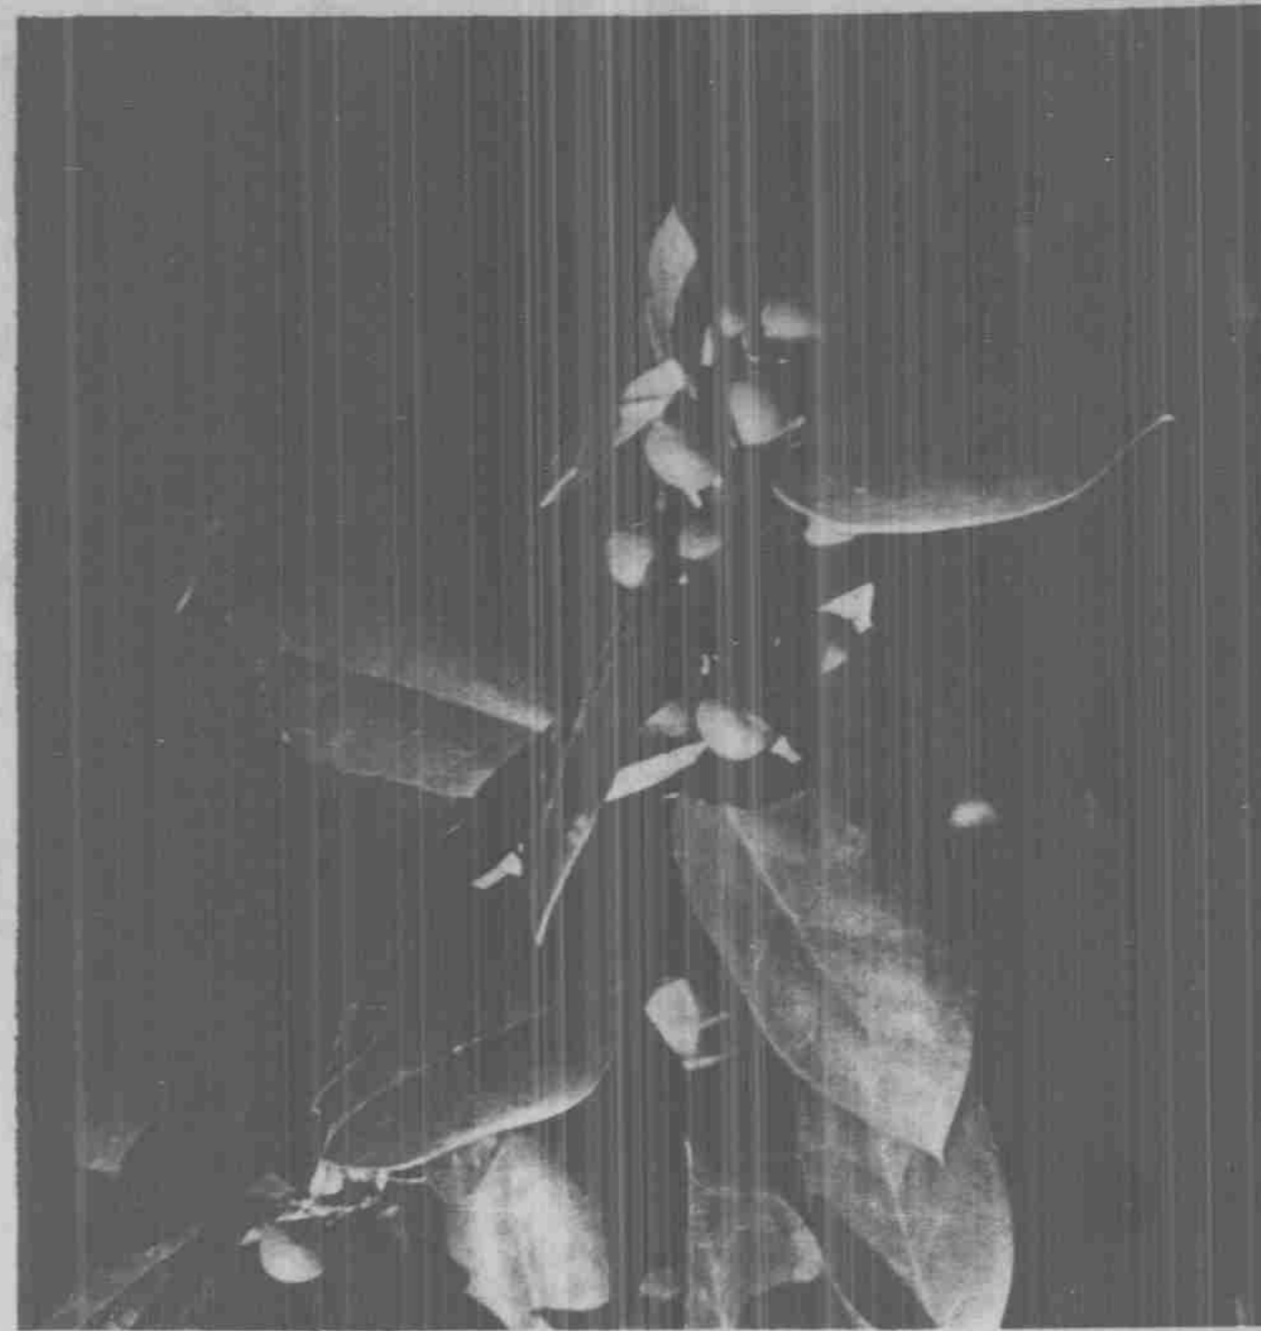

"All of you know that many of your parent oil companies recognize the need for beautification. I don't think it is going to be painful as you think," Welsh said.

The board also passed an ordinance designating towing zones in the central business district of Chapel Hill.

At a prior meeting of the board, Alderman Shirley Marshall had criticized the use of specially-designated parking spaces for the handicapped by delivery trucks and recommended corrective action.

In other actions, the aldermen:

- Postponed consideration of an extensive list of budget changes, including a controversial request that appropriations to a police department evidence fund be increased. Town Manager Chet Kendzior set the Feb. 4 meeting of the board for discussion of the item;
- Approved merger of area programs for the elderly into the Orange County Council on Aging;
- Set Feb. 25 as the date for a public hearing on the appropriateness of delegating increased powers over special use zoning permits to the Board of Adjustment rather than retaining such powers.

Is Mother Nature kidding? Or is it really spring? We don't know. The calendar says we have two more months of winter; the ground hog will probably agree. But the flowers and bushes around town seem to think differently. (Staffphoto by Gary Lobraico)

Hunt seeks second term in assembly

Trish Hunt, state representative for the 17th district (Orange and Chatham counties) announced Wednesday that she will seek re-election.

The one-term incumbent from Chapel Hill is a Chapel Hill High School guidance counselor, now on leave of absence.

During her term with the General Assembly, Hunt served on the Appropriations, Health, Mental Health, Education, Higher Education, State Government and Correctional Institutions committees.

She was also appointed to serve on the Governor's Council on the Advocacy of Youth and Children.

She is a member of the Advisory Committee to the N.C. Student Legislature and of the Board of Visitors of Peace College.

The second representative of the 17th district, Ed Holmes, has not yet filed for re-election.

Congressman has big plans incident, "the most important fortuitous occurrence in modern times."

Dellums cited some lessons that the American people should have learned from Watergate. He said the first lesson is the "danger of placing winning as the number one value in this country."

The second lesson Dellums cited is the "danger of putting extraordinary powers into the hands of the President." He said that in the last three years, Congress "has given the President czarist powers," especially during the Vietnam War.

Nixon's actions during the war, including the bombing of Cambodia, prompted the congressman to introduce a bill in the House in 1972 calling for his impeachment. Reflecting on Nixon's impounding of $40 billion in congress-appropriated funds over the past five years, Dellums said the American people should call a constitutional convention to re-establish the boundaries in the system of checks and balances.

Dellums was outspoken on private contributions to political campaigns. He has introduced a bill in the House calling for public funding of political campaigns.

Dellums outlined short and long term goals for ridding the country of political corruption. His first short-term goal is to impeach the President.

Another goal of the congressman is to get the majority of people involved in the voting process.

Dellums' long term goals include changing the basic value systems. "Each of us must assume the responsibility for the world we seek," he said. "We must learn to believe that life is the most precious substance on earth and all people need a place to reach their fullest potential."

"We need a coalition of new niggers," he said. He defined them as any one whose role in society is defined by circumstance and opportunity. This definition includes blacks and other Third World people, women and the working class. This coalition swept Dellums into office along with other radical candidates in California's 7th Congressional District.

Congressman Dellums will speak at UNC during the annual Black Arts Cultural Festival in April.
