

Warren Farrell at Union press conference

Psychological benefits claimed

Farrell talks on male liberation

by Gall Bronson
Staff Writer

Most of the benefits of men's and women's liberation are psychological, not economic, liberation advocate Warren Farrell said in a press conference Monday.

Farrell, who heads the task force on the "male mystique" for the National Organization for Women (NOW), was on campus as a feature of the Women's Festival, sponsored by the Association of Women Students.

"Men's liberation means not needing to dominate in every conversation, not being so emotionally constipated you can't cry, being able to ask for help and admit weakness," Farrell said.

A dark, bearded man, Farrell recently gave up his political science teaching post at Rutgers University to design and teach courses on sexual politics at American University.

Farrell said a man should no longer be held responsible for bringing home all the money, so he can be free to take a job he is really interested in, even though it pays less.

"Liberation has allowed me to be much more creative," Farrell said. "The liberated man doesn't always have to worry about what will happen to his family if he is fired, if he knows his wife is contributing to the income."

American men have been going through a rash of impotence since the women's movement started because of their inability to feel more sexually turned on by a woman who's turned on to him, Farrell said.

"Men have been brought up to define their manhood as 'the man, the problem solver,'" he said. "They have very few resources for dealing with a woman who expresses herself fully."

Farrell said he didn't think men's liberation would have evolved without the women's movement.

Men's and women's liberation have got to work together — there is very little conflict, he said.

"A large number of women are interpreting liberation as adopting the masculine value system, which is what we're worried about," Farrell said.

"Men have a lot to learn by adopting some of the traditional feminine values, such as learning how to listen," he said.

Farrell said the movement will have a very real effect on society if it causes 10-15 per cent of the men to change their priorities.

"There's too much competition today — capitalism and masculinity are tied together," he said.

"Masculinity is defined very much as getting to the top of whatever ladder you're on," he said.

He said the assertive element of masculinity should be maintained, but men shouldn't feel they have to prove themselves as men.

Committee starts reform drive

by Robin Clark
Staff Writer

The Academic Reform Committee (ARC) has started a campuswide drive to acquaint students with the ramifications of changing the present academic system.

The ARC proposal, which is tentatively scheduled for Faculty Council debate Mar. 22, includes increasing the number of hours spent in each course per week to four, and reducing the normal load to four courses per semester.

The new academic system, according to committee chairman Lisa Bradley, will also offer courses that vary in hours of class time per week. "We hope this will do away with some of the rigidity of the present system," Bradley said.

Efforts to acquaint students with the pros and cons of the switch are tentatively set to begin Wed., Feb. 13, when committee members will speak to the residents of the Granville Towers complex.

The main objectives of the new system, explained Bradley, are "to get the students more engaged in each class by reducing course load from five to four, and to allow more intensive study of the subject material by increasing the number of class-hours per week."

As well as a campus-wide question answering tour the committee is also printing 5000 copies of a two-page informative brochure "to tell students why we want the change and what some of the priorities of the reform will be."

"Our campus information tour is designed to let students know the possibilities of such a system and to urge them to let their impetus be felt by the Faculty Council," Bradley said.

The Faculty Council has requested an inclusive poll of student opinion on the proposed changes from the ARC before the Mar. 22 debate date. The Council will also vote on academic reform this spring, but the date has not been announced.

Latin American festival begins

The Institute of Latin American Studies begins its Spring Film Festival and Latin American activities today with a Latin American dinner and Chilean film.

The dinner, sponsored by the International Student Center, will be held at 6:30 in the Newman Center. Admission is $2.50 and tickets may be bought at the Union desk or the International Student Office in Carr Dormitory.

The film festival and Latin American activities program is jointly sponsored by the Institute of Latin American Studies, College of Arts and Sciences, International Student Center, Carolina Population Center and the departments of political science, anthropology, romance languages and geography.

Included in the spring activities are a series of Latin American films, weekly Latin American lunches, a costume party and guest speakers.

have said they will not seek re-election. Vickery said he plans to stress campaign reform legislation "to restore the integrity of the political process."

"It is the right of every citizen to demand sensitive and responsive leadership free from the corrupting influence of special interest groups and lobbyists," he said.

"A private citizen's financial dealings may be a private matter but once anyone seeks an office of public trust those dealings must be disclosed," he said. "Legislation accomplishing this will help to restore the integrity of the political process."

Vickery grew up in Forest City. He was admitted to the bar in 1970 and served as solicitor for the 15th Judicial District. Since 1971, Vickery has been associated with the law firm of Winston, Coleman and Bernholz of Chapel Hill and Hillsborough.

Ride to UNC basketball game

Bus tickets are now available for Tar Heel basketball fans looking for a ride to Greensboro for this Saturday's game against Florida State. Student Government is sponsoring it. The bus will leave the Union parking lot at 6 p.m., Saturday, Feb. 16. Round-trip tickets for the bus can be purchased for $2.25 in Suite C of the Union between 2 p.m. and 4 p.m. today and Wednesday.

Student Transportation Director Lew Warren said that the trip will be conditional upon the 38-passenger bus being filled.
