

Academic Advisory Committee

Registration pressures to ease

by Henry Farber
Staff Writer

Remember the stacks of paper they sent you the summer before your freshman year that were supposed to help you figure out what to register for? Kind of made you wish you'd enrolled in the community college down the road instead of that hell-raising place on the Hill that your high school adviser said was too big anyway.

Recruiting schedule set

The UNC-CH Career Planning and Placement Service has announced that 13 organizations will be recruiting on campus during the week of March 25-29.

Monday, March 25: H.J. Heinz Company; Strand, Skees, Jones and Co. and Cumberland County Hospital System, Inc.

Tuesday, March 26: H.J. Heinz Company; Terminal Communications, Inc.; Carolina Power and Light Co. and Bank of Virginia Company.

Wednesday, March 27: Graybar Electric Co., Inc.; University of Tennessee/Knoxville Library; The Northwestern Bank and Liggett and Myers, Inc.

Maybe it wasn't that bad. The pre-registration instructions were fairly explicit: "If you choose to spend the next four years of your life following the B.S. program in neuro-social urban therapy, ignore the next eleven-teen pages. If not, Go to Jail, Do Not Pass Go, Do Not Pay $219.50."

As hard as the General College advisers try to help freshmen out, there were always the ambiguities in the letters they sent you and the uncertainties about how to pursue a major in the students' best interests.

And once students get settled into their dorms, the advisers never seem to have enough time to help freshmen feel confident about the decisions they're making about their future.

To help these freshmen and all General College students, for that matter, about 85 members of the Student Academic Advisory Committee have been working since September to personalize and to make more efficient the advisory process.

Lisa Bradley, a sophomore committee member who is also working for academic reform, said Wednesday in an interview, the Student Government group has done its most valuable work in the gym during registration. At a table in Woolen, the student volunteers have been helping to take some of the tail off the lines that invariably form in front of the faculty advisers' tables.

The student advisers don't have the authority to sign drop-add and registration forms, but Bradley said they have proved helpful in giving advice on what sections and instructors to sign up for, plus giving information about South Building's procedures and policies.

The overall goals of the committee, Bradley said, are to personalize the advisory process and to encourage more careful selection of courses. She indicated she was impressed by the number of students who have called the adviser's office in Suite A of the Union for academic assistance, and for information about the committee's tutorial program.

Next fall the committee plans to assign three student advisors to aid each of the General College advisers during registration. Bradley said she thought the student advisers could be of considerable aid to the professional advisers, who handle an average of about 120 students each.

The Student Academic Advisory Committee is a subsidiary of the more encompassing Academic Affairs Committee, which plans to request official recognition by the Campus Governing Council and the funds which usually accompany such recognition. The Academic Affairs Committee also includes the Academic Reform Committee and other temporary committees which work for greater student input into various academic affairs.

"As far as power goes," Bradley said, the Academic Affairs Committee is going to be a very big group on campus. It's going to be an important part of Student Government."

Another concern of the Academic Affairs Committee, Bradley said, will be an expansion of the number of courses students can place out of by taking standardized tests.

Bradley said she would like to see more placement tests for some history courses, for example, where a student could study on his own during the summer and receive pass-fail credit. "Right now," she said, "it needs to be standardized and publicized."

Streakers who travel N.C. incognito may break laws they do not need to Streakers who choose to travel incognito could find themselves violating some laws they hadn't counted on. Not only do state statutes have indecent exposure covered, a masked streaker can get into trouble due to the one piece of clothing he has left one.

According to UNC professor of North Carolina history, Jerry Cashion, a law passed in 1868 prohibits the wearing of masks or hoods on public roads, public property and the property of others. It was originally designed to be used against Ku Klux Klan terrorists during Reconstruction.

Cashion witnessed a violation of the law not long before spring break when a student wearing only a ski mask streaked his class of almost 300 students. "What disturbed me was not the violation of the indecent exposure law, but the violation of the Klan Act," Cashion said.

Cashion resumed his lecture and he said, "I was here during the campus upheaval in the 60's—this was mild in comparison."

The law has been enforced very little in this century, with the exception of the 1950's period which saw a revival of the Ku Klux Klan. Legal exemptions have been made for Halloween, safety, and other legitimate masks.
