

Student job prospects

Summer employment tightens up

by Frank Griffin
Staff Writer

Geri Wilson, summer job placement counselor for the University's Career Planning and Placement Service, said the opportunities for summer employment by this time of year are already limited, so students who register now with the Placement Service should not feel that a job is guaranteed. However, students are still encouraged to register she said.

Wilson said the Placement Service was in a sense a clearing house for information on jobs. The service acts as a focal point where employers can make their employment needs known and where students can come to find out the opportunities available to them.

Wilson called Chapel Hill and the Triangle area a crowded area for summer employment. She said employers in Chapel Hill can often fill their summer positions simply by hiring students who come directly to them seeking employment.

The Placement Service therefore tends to stress job opportunities outside the immediate area, Wilson said.

Wilson said she encourages students not to restrict themselves to one particular city or region when seeking a job. She said it was important to be geographically flexible so that the student would be in a better position to get a job of special interest to him, especially in cases where job openings are very competitive.

Many employers don't actually recruit on campus for summer jobs, Wilson said; most of them contact the Placement Service by phone or mail, but those who do recruit on campus are in the final stages now.

Because summer jobs include many seasonal jobs, students traditionally find positions open with summer camps, resorts and construction companies. But while these three remain a major source of summer employment, Wilson said, the range and variety of employment available is wide.

The Placement Service has set up a Summer Job Reading Room in 203 Gardner Hall to provide information on available jobs and suggestions for types of jobs. The room is open and students can browse through the files which have jobs arranged according to location and type of work involved.

Wilson said one of the sources used by students is the Geographic Survey Notebooks. These contain questionnaires filled out by UNC students describing the jobs they held during the previous summer and include evaluations of the jobs. These notebooks provide good information to students who are unsure of what they want to do during the summer.

The "Summer Employment Directory" gives a listing of camps, summer theatres, ranches, resorts, restaurants and businesses that regularly hire college students for summer help. The directory says that employers of resorts and camps look mostly for good references, training, work experience and special skills when reviewing applicants. Camp salaries can vary greatly but room and board are usually included.

If you wanted to work for the Federal Government this summer and haven't yet applied, then you're probably too late. Many of their office jobs require the applicant to take a "Summer Employment Exam" and the last date to apply for this exam was Jan. 25. There are, however, laborer's jobs available with application deadlines of April 15.

For those of you who wanted to work in Europe this summer and are now a little discouraged, the possibility of finding a job there still exists. The Council on International Educational Exchange, an agency that helps students get their work papers without a lot of red tape, announced recently, "Most of the recent problems (in Britain) were closely related to labor disputes that have now been settled. If any students have difficulty in finding a job for any reason our cooperating agency in London will assist them."

If you're looking for a job in Chapel Hill, you can try the Career Planning and Placement Office, 211 Gardner; the Employment Security Commission on Franklin Street; the Student Aid Office in Vance Hall; a bulletin board lists part time job openings; the UNC Personnel Office in Vance Hall; the Personnel Office at N.C. Memorial Hospital or your department in the University.

Taylor denies appeal by campus policemen

A third appeal by campus policemen protesting recent changes in their work shift schedule was denied this week by Chancellor N. Ferebee Taylor.

In a letter dated April 1, which policemen received Wednesday, Taylor said he followed the unanimous recommendation of the University Staff Grievance Committee in denying the appeal.

Both police spokesman Eunice Sparrow, and their attorney, Roy M. Cole, declined to comment on whether an appeal will be made to the State Personnel Board.

Taylor's decision was made after he received a three-page report on the third step grievance procedure hearing held March 18, from Professor Gerald Barrett, chairman of the grievance committee. Barrett's report was attached to Taylor's letter and said the committee unanimously recommended that the appeal be denied.

The policemen's grievance stems from the implementation of an "exchange program" last February under which officers, one-at-a-time, serve two weeks on each of the two shifts other than their regular shifts. The protesting officers say they were hired with the unwritten agreement that they would work a fixed shift.

Thirteen of the 28 campus policemen signed a petition Jan. 31 which set up the third step hearing.

In his letter denying the appeal, Chancellor Taylor quoted the grievance committee report as saying, "There can be no serious doubt that the protested system has the potential for constituting a significant improvement over the former system. . . It is a small price to pay to achieve greater versatility to ask each officer to spend a few weeks each year working on other shifts, while he continues to work on his regular shift for some 44 to 48 weeks each year."
