

Female cop takes on job

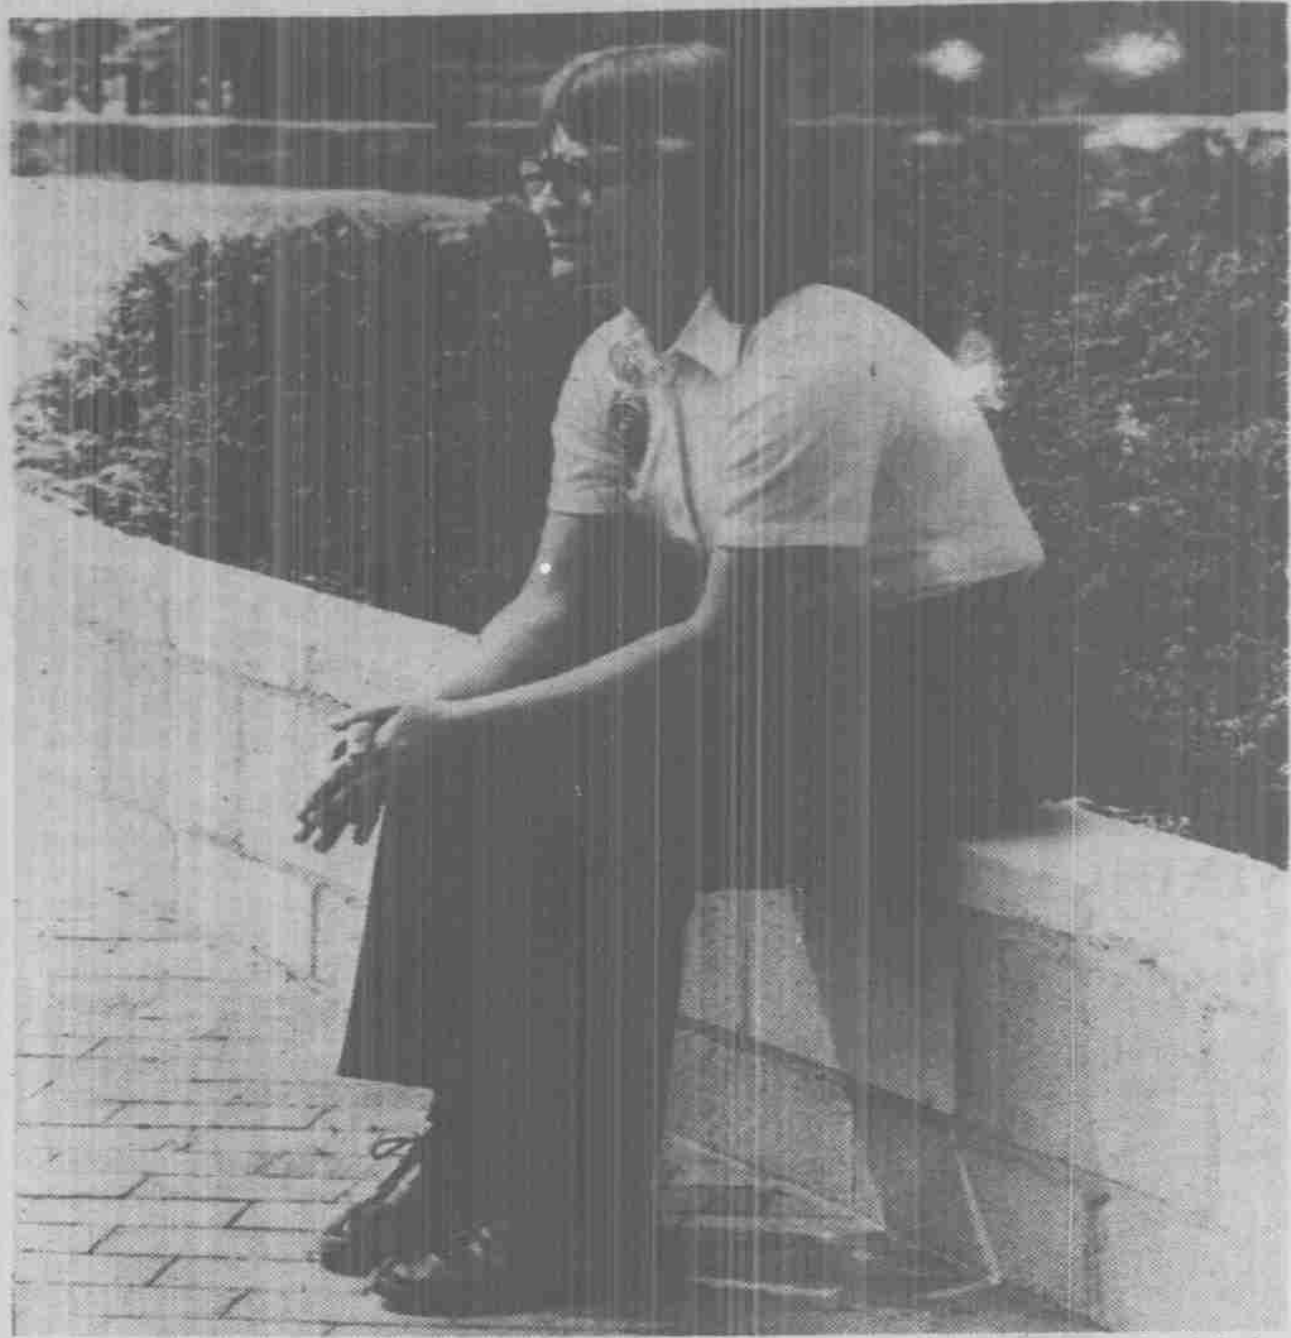

by Chuck Babington
Feature Writer

Dene Eller did not become a campus cop because of a long-held desire to be a law enforcer. She just needed a job and the University Security Services had an opening. Now the only female campus policeman says she enjoys her work so much that the money is not important.

Eller talked easily about her job. "The best part is meeting a lot of people, both students and University personnel," she said. The hardest part of the job, she said, is gaining the respect of the students, both male and female. "People just aren't used to having a woman law enforcer," she explained. Eller, a 21-year-old native of China Grove and a graduate of Gardner Webb College, was not satisfied working at a local restaurant, so earlier this year she went to the UNC personnel office to look for a job. "The police job was one of the few openings I qualified for," she said. "But I didn't think I'd get the job, because I'm a woman." In early March, Eller was hired by the campus police, and three days later she began attending police rookie school at Duke. Most of the men on the force welcome her, she said. "Of course there is some resentment that a woman is doing a man's job." Eller shares the locker room in which the policemen keep their equipment and where they sit and talk before going on duty. "The men seem to accept me," she said, "but sometimes they'll start to say something, and then stop when they remember I'm there." Eller said she was nervous the first time she handled a pistol. Now she carries one whenever on duty. "I just hope I never have to use it," she said. Eller has been working at UNC three weeks, either walking or driving around the campus. Last Friday afternoon, Eller witnessed one of her most unusual experiences. Two men driving around Cobb Dorm were squinting people from their car with fire extinguishers.

'Chez Joey' formidable

by Karin Lium
Book Reviewer

Chez Joey: The World of Joe Flaherty, by Joe Flaherty, Coward, McCann, & Geoghegan Inc., $7.95.

Joe Flaherty—fiery, funny, fabulous, formidable. The adjectives could go on forever. A so-called new journalist, Flaherty writes with a flair that should be the envy of every journalist, old or new. Here, in Chez Joey, are 50 pieces of Flaherty's writing which are a truly a delightful reading experience.

with a grain of salt. Nothing is beyond his gleeful humor. Flaherty can laugh at just about anything simply because laughter is more meaningful to him than tears. He can laugh at himself and in turn make us laugh at ourselves and situations that we would normally take too seriously or turn our backs on. Really, anyone who can make us laugh with Howard Cosell has to have a special talent. Flaherty exhibits a perceptive wit. Bobby Riggs, he writes is "a 55-year-old half-blind tennis player—who looks like a cross between Phil Silvers and a penguin... the man hits the ball with the ferocity of a sorority sister in a dorm pillow fight and walks as if he were a perpetual shill for Dr. Scholl's foot pads."

Even William Buckley can't escape Flaherty's scrutiny. "In the subterranean level of our soul William Buckley is of that class of men who smell like aged leather, who kick dogs and debauch the upstairs maid. He is indeed our last rake." One of Flaherty's most humorous accounts is his impressions of the first bar mitzvah he attended. "The tissue paper separating the various parts of the announcement alone could have been used as a dropcloth for the painting of the Sistine Chapel... A buffet was laid out on a circular table approximately the circumference of the Astrodome roof. I could have used the help of Supp-Hose just to walk around it."

She wrote down the license number and later helped trap the men in the Union parking lot. One of the less humorous functions of her job is to handle the questioning of female assault victims, Eller said. Fortunately, no such case has yet arisen. Eller came to Chapel Hill last fall to work for a masters degree in physical education. Now, she says, she is considering entering the police science curriculum. For Eller, working as a female cop may become more than a temporary job.
