

Legal committee finds free help for students

by Jim Roberts
Staff Writer

Although legal aid is plentiful in Chapel Hill, it is seldom inexpensive, and students on tight budgets are often unwilling to fork out $50 or more for simple legal assistance. In an effort to help students get free legal advice, Student Government has set up the Student Legal Assistance Committee. The committee does not actually give the legal advice, but it does refer students to lawyers who are willing to give a few minutes of free advice to the students. The committee has aided 60 students to date.

Students who wish to use the committee's services first must go to the committee office in Suite C of the Union and fill out a form describing the legal assistance needed.

The committee contacts one of the lawyers working with the service to see if he will become involved in the student's case. If the lawyer is interested, the assistance committee sets up a telephone conversation between the student and attorney. If the telephone conversation is not sufficient, the student will make an appointment with the lawyer.

Problems which can be settled over the phone will usually be free of charge. Paul Jakokes, chairman of the committee, said, "I cannot define where the cutoff point is, but some lawyers go pretty far. Simple legal advice will be free in most cases, but this is not necessarily so in complicated legal matters."

Jakokes said the lawyers will tell students when they will begin charging. "We often try to find what a charge will be for an office appointment and try to get a commitment from the lawyer. Most lawyers are very reasonable though. They don't reach for your wallet the minute you walk in."

The committee will also inform students of any other legal services available. Jakokes said, "If a student is charged in a serious criminal case and he cannot afford a lawyer's services, the state will appoint one for him."

"Indigent students who want to bring a civil case can use the Chapel Hill-Carboro Legal Aid Society. If they see that a student can't afford a lawyer they will take one from the pool and refer the student to him."

Jakokes noted that the legal assistance service benefits both students and the lawyers. "Students get more information than they normally would receive for free. Also, the service gives the attorneys business because some students need more than simple legal advice."

The committee contacted over 60 Orange County lawyers when setting up the service. Nineteen have so far agreed to give students advice. As the committee uses one lawyer, his name is put on the bottom of the list and the next attorney on the list is used for the next case. This keeps attorneys from being overburdened with students' cases.

Jakokes said his committee is considering setting up a legal defense corporation much like that at North Carolina State University.

State's defense corporation was given $10,000 by the NCSU student government. The corporation picks out cases it considers relevant to all students and hires lawyers to try the cases. "We will evaluate the need this year," Jakokes said. "Then we may go to the Campus Governing Council for an appropriation."

Correction

The Daily Tar Heel incorrectly reported last Tuesday that photos to be entered in the Toronto Exchange photo contest must be taken and developed by contest entrants. The photos must, in fact, only be taken by entrants. The film can be developed by whomever entrants choose.

The DTH regrets the error.

Mall lot still clogged

"The situation has not changed" for University Mall merchants who began complaining last month that park-and-ride drivers were using prime parking space to catch buses to campus, mall promotional director Kay Vandenberg said Monday.

Commuters hesitate to use the designated park-and-ride lot behind the mall because it has not been striped off, Vandenberg said. Mall officials discussed striping the lot as long ago as early September.

Meanwhile, many park-and-riders continue to use spaces close to the mall in the south lot, Vandenberg said.

Concern is growing that severe parking problems will accompany the Christmas rush, Vandenberg said, adding that all lots were packed last year even without the bus system.

She was not relieved to learn that first semester classes will be over almost two weeks before Christmas, saying "most of the park-and-ride people are campus employees, not students."

Merchants have asked that commuters park as close as possible to the Binkley Church, 15-501 area.

Plans to move a mall bus stop have been discussed, but "no decision was ever made on that," Vandenberg said.

Police recapture prisoner

by Vince Wheeler
Staff Writer

A prisoner who escaped from the Department of Corrections juvenile prison in Harnett County Friday night was recaptured by Chapel Hill police in Graham dorm.

Kenneth Bowen, 21, formerly of Hop Mills, was taken into custody about 7 p.m. Bowen came to his cousin's dorm room Saturday afternoon looking for a place to spend the night. Bowen's cousin, Benny McFayden, 315 Graham, said Bowen was waiting in the hall at 2 p.m. when he returned from work.

McFayden said he left the room and called his parents in Fayetteville, who contacted the Cumberland County sheriff's department. The department then informed the Chapel Hill Police of Bowen's location.

James Long, visiting from Fayetteville, arrived at McFayden's room about 15 minutes before the police arrived. Long said McFayden was not in the room when he arrived, but he thought Bowen was McFayden's roommate.

Long said he had no identification with him when the police arrived, so he was also taken to police headquarters. Long was later released.

McFayden said Bowen told him he had walked away from a football game in Lillington Friday night and had spent the night in Raleigh. Bowen was an honor-grade prisoner, McFayden said, and had served about one year of a two-year sentence for larceny.

"He was not really dangerous to anyone but himself," McFayden said. "He said he just wanted to talk to someone and go to Fayetteville or High Point. He was really scared."

McFayden said Bowen told him he did not want to go back to the prison. "He said they would beat him and work him 12 hours a day," McFayden said. "He said they would make him do things so he would not be able to leave again."

An organizational meeting to plan consciousness-raising groups will be held 5 p.m. Wednesday in 202 Peabody.

The groups will be sponsored by the Association of Women Students, AWS head James Ellis said. The groups will be led by Dr. Eugene Watson of the UNC School of Education and three other trained facilitators, Ellis said.

Open to both females and males, the groups offer students the option of joining an all-female, all-male or mixed consciousness-raising group. They will be conducted under the personal growth mode, Ellis said. "That is, the facilitators will try to take the directions the participants want to take, not just listen to gripes."

Ellis said participants should have an idea of their schedules so that meeting times may be arranged. Persons interested but not able to attend the organizational meeting may bring their names and schedules to AWS in Union Suite D, or call 933-2165.
