Group will provide social services, lobbying for vets

UNC Veterans' Club organized

by George Bascio Staff Writer

Pate, a Peace, War and Defense major, said the club "will serve the double purpose of being a non-political social organization and a special interest group."

The club held its first organizational meeting Thursday and has petitioned Student Government (SG) for recognition and funds.

"We as a group have different backgrounds and interests which the rest of the student body does not have. We're basically older and maybe... more mature," Pate said.

"This club will cross all racial, sexual and ethnic backgrounds—it will be just a collection of typical Americans."

Although Pate sent out more than 200 letters to some of UNC's 815 veterans, he was pleased with Thursday's turnout of 25 people. From this group, a steering committee of eight veterans was formed to draft a constitution.

"SG will fund us if we get a constitution written and have it approved by the Dean of Student Affairs. But SG is putting the screws to us already since they'll be handling our purse strings," Pate said.

Pate's group is patterned after the veterans' club at North Carolina State University. State's club earned an additional $2,000 last year by bagging books at the school store, washing cars and running one of Carter Stadium's four concession stands. Pate thinks such projects are necessary to insure the group's freedom from SG control.

In addition to serving as a social outlet for veterans and their families, UNC's Veterans' Club will be a lobbying group for special problems of veterans.

Pate agreed with several members who spoke out at Thursday's meeting against the recently passed GI educational assistance bill.

"The bill discriminates against people who work hard, and it was an oversight on whoever's part in not applying it to graduate school," he said.

Pate is also seeking a special orientation program for incoming veterans to UNC. He would also like to see changes in other veterans' benefits, such as the VA hospital program, which he says is not even as good as the Student Health Services.

Pate prefers however, to refrain from speaking in specifics until the club has been organized.

"The good thing about this is that we can do whatever we want with this club and I won't know exactly what that will be until we talk with everyone involved, see what they want, and draw up a constitution."

The decision to join the march was made during a BSM central committee meeting Monday. Representatives from the group will also participate in a "Black Leadership Summit Conference" to be held before the march.
