Preparation for upcoming student referendum CGC Committee studies reform

by Art Eisenstadt
Staff Writer

In the final week before an election that could determine its future, the Campus Governing Council (CGC) has been busy reforming itself.

Book sale now over

Students who sold textbooks at the Alpha Phi Omega (APO) Book Co-op should pick up their books or money between 10 a.m. and 4 p.m. today and Saturday in the basement of Smith building.

The co-op, which had raised $11,976.25 as of Wednesday, was begun several years ago by APO to help students save money by selling their textbooks on consignment.

APO will also hold its informal spring rush next week on Jan. 20, 21, and 23 from 7-9 p.m. at the APO complex in the basement of Smith Building.

In addition to sponsoring the book co-op, APO handles the Campus Chest carnival, auction and sock-hop, the campus lost and found department, and conducts tours of the campus. APO also gives money to a student aid scholarship and handles approximately $20,000 each year for charity.

The special CGC Committee on Reforms held public hearings for three hours Wednesday.

While the "public" in attendance totalled ten, including three Student Government (SG) members, the five-member committee heard a variety of proposals to improve the structure and operation of the council.

Students will decide next Tuesday whether to retain the two-year-old CGC or return to the old SG constitution and the 50-member Student Legislature (SL). A vote against CGC would also nullify all amendments passed in the last two years.

A two-thirds vote against the current system will be required to defeat it.

Assuming that there will be a CGC next year, the reform committee discussed several ways to improve the organization in the future.

There was strong support for the idea of expanding CGC to include up to ten additional members, restructuring the election of off-campus representatives, making the council more responsive to the needs of various groups on campus and providing better information about council activities.

Janie Clark, Student Consumer Action Union (SCAU) chairman, was the first to urge that the council be expanded beyond its current 20 members, but remaining smaller than the old SL.

"We put a lot of time into our organization (SCAU) for example, and I don't think 20 legislators can evaluate us and other organizations," Clark said.

Lisa Bradley, chairman of the Academic Affairs Committee, recommended that CGC establish a coordinating committee in which the committee members would keep a closer watch on student organizations.

One observer suggested the council add ten additional members, five to be elected at large. The at-large members could then be assigned to work with various SG and social organizations.

Kay House, a former co-chairman of Chapel Hill People for PIRG, explained the system used at UNC-Greensboro in which the runners-up in the Student Senate elections serve as legislative aides to the winners.

"The last few years it got harder. The legs, the feet would start to hurt, I wasn't as fast. It wasn't the officiating. It was the travel, having to hitchhike, the cold, the rain, out there all the time."

He quit but was deluged with requests to go on the lecture circuit. "It was through the fame, the color, the Lou Bello mystique, I'll leave it up to you, whatever."

From there he ended up on TV, as a sportscaster for Channel 5 in Raleigh. "I've been all over the country. Know the players, coaches, refs, I'm a fan. A fan. We're all good friends. I'm not trying to brag but we don't have to sell Lou Bello."

He came to WRDU in 1972 as sports director. The station looks like a disorganized shoe box, outside and in, but Lou is there, so the place shakes.

"I'm Lou Bello the character, the referee, the sports director. And TV, it's fun and I love it. Lucky, how lucky I am. Ohhh, sports."

Lou leaves the bathroom and wings his way to the studio 20 seconds before he goes on the air. The cameraman, yawning, is standing around with his hands in his pockets. Travis has just finished doing the weather. Sports is next. Right after the commercial.

Lou sits down, straightens his red tie, and picks up his new scepter, the microphone. He's smiling into the camera long before the commercial's over.

"Time!" he shouts. The cameraman startles. "Ten seconds," he answers. Lou leans forward in his chair and grins wider into the camera. He looks like he wants to eat it.

"Stand-by," the cameraman says. The light goes on.

"Hi-ya, sports fans. We've got some biggies here tonight." He pauses and grins wider into the camera. "BIGGIES," he shouts, echoing all over the studio.

So he's off and winging his way into the scores and analyses and personal anecdotes. His style is absurd and exciting at the same time.

People have been calling the station ever since he started and asking, "Who is that idiot doing sports? Can't you find anyone better?" The calls start as soon as he comes on the air.

But the winged Mercury won't be stopped. There are more people who love him than hate him. It's the price one pays for fame, for being the legend-myth of sports.

Lou finishes the sports saying "See-ya" and grinning. His image fades out and Beethoven's 7th Symphony comes on. He thanks the cameraman and dances around the studio for a while. He goes back to the wire room and cuts off the AP wire. He will begin again tomorrow.

DOONESBURY

Dear Mr. President, I heard that if I wrote you I would get a personal letter back.

I will be honest with you. Right now I have no friends at school. But if I had a letter from you everyone would want to be my friend.

Please use paper that says the White House so that the kids won't think I wrote it myself to trick them. Also, please write a personal P.S. out of hiding ground and stuff.

This better work.
