Bill allows vote for GPSF head

by Art Eisenstadt
Staff Writer

A bill providing for a Feb. 26 advisory election of a president of the Graduate and Professional Students Federation (GPSF) has narrowly survived strong opposition by the Campus Governing Council (CGC) and Student Body President Marcus Williams. CGC approved the bill Tuesday by a 7-6 margin, and Williams spoke of vetoing the measure Wednesday.

assurances from GPSF president Harvey Zelon that the GPSF senate would almost certainly accept the result of the election. The present GPSF constitution states that the senate shall choose the president, but does not specify the method. In January, the senate recommended direct election of the president, but the constitution has not yet been formally amended. Williams has expressed concern that the winner of the election would not necessarily be accepted by the GPSF Senate. "The interest displayed in this matter has been sufficient to warrant the election," he said in a short statement Wednesday. "But there are certain areas in the GPSF constitution that need to be examined. Thus, I sign the bill with some reservations." He added he did not have any internal control over GPSF, but said he would send a letter urging Zelon to have the constitution amended to allow popular vote. CGC Rep. John Sawyer, who is also a GPSF senator, said a 110-name petition had been submitted to Student Government favoring direct presidential elections.

Zelon said Wednesday the Senate had informally agreed in January that it would either ratify the result of the election, or dismiss it due to campaign irregularities. "It could not choose someone else," he said. Asked what would happen if the senate rejected the election, Zelon said, "The possibility of the senate not ratifying the election is very, very slim." The bill passed by CGC requires all candidates for GPSF president to conform with the election, meaning they will each have to submit a 100 name petition to the board by next Wednesday. "Only graduate and professional students can sign the petitions and vote in the election."

Hunt: ERA will alter views

by Elizabeth George
Staff Writer

"The real thing that ERA will do for North Carolina comes not in changes in legislation, but in changes in the attitudes of people who make the decisions," Rep. Trish Stanford Hunt told a meeting of the Young Democrats Club Tuesday night. "It will set a different tone for the courts and for employers, although it might only result in the hiring of women as tokens... but this is all a part of emancipation," she said.

and should be scheduled for debate on the floor within the next month. If ratified, it will then be passed on for vote by the state Senate. Hunt, a Chapel Hill native representing Orange and Chatham counties, told an audience of 60 students that the chances of ratification of ERA are "very good, if we get on the stick to get it through." If North Carolina ratifies ERA, then only two more states' ratification will be needed to make it constitutional law. ERA will not affect North Carolina a great deal because most of the blatantly sexist legislation has already been changed, Hunt said. She said she will still vote for it because "the principle is right."

The Equal Rights Amendment (ERA) is currently under study by a committee in the North Carolina House of Representatives.

The present laws concerning rape will not be dropped from the books, Hunt said. "We'll just have to add male and female. This should also give impetus to removing it as a capital crime."

Women as well as men will be subject to the draft, Hunt said. "The majority of women don't want to serve, but it's the same with the males too. This should make women feel more responsible." Hunt believes that the percentage of soldiers involved in active combat duty will decline dramatically in future wars, and said that "some finagling" might be done to see that most women do not get into combat. Men will benefit also from the passage of ERA in several areas, specifically child support and alimony laws in North Carolina, Hunt said. Currently, judges who make decisions in child support cases tend to favor the mother. "She keeps the children. He pays the money," she said.

All graduate or professional students wishing to run for GPSF president should pick up petitions in Suite C of the Union and return them by 11 p.m. Feb. 12 to the GPSF office in Suite D with a minimum of 100 signatures. Prospective candidates can get additional election information from the GPSF office.
