*Campus Calendar Odum criticizes government bureaucracy

by Greg Nye

Government bureaucracy is one of the greatest obstacles to solving environmental problems, Dr. Eugene Odum, director of the Institute of Ecology at the University of Georgia, told a capacity audience in Great Hall Wednesday.

"The rigidity of large governmental and industrial bureaucracies makes it difficult for them to respond to even the simplest problems," he said.

Odum criticized the current technology in dealing with environmental problems. "A pollution problem can't be solved by a quickfix-trying to convert the by-product to something neutral or diverting it to another product, they know that society will have to foot the bill," he said.

The real solution, Odum said, is to use the quick-fix method when necessary, but work on completely eliminating the sources of the problems.

once industry creates the undesirable by-

Other problems Odum foresees in the near luture are the bankruptcy of public utilities and growing energy consumption.

"To survive and still maintain life as we know it, we have to develop another form of energy," Odum told the audience. Atomic fission energy, he said, may be the answer.

Odum said that solutions to environmental problems often cause more problems for society than they solve. "Trying to raise production to feed the increasing population is decreasing our energy efficiency.

"The quick-fix approach is used because "We have to assess each solution in terms of its costs and the impact on society, paying close attention to the effect upon certain groups in society."

Odum said that people should be writing their congressmen asking for more environmental control. "Politicians say that we are in a recession and no money is available to protect our environment. But this is not true -we have only spent one half of one per cent on environmental control."

Odum said that one of the most pressing problems in human survival is the need for foresight. "We have been caught over and over again not anticipating our problems. This must change if we are to face the crises of the future."

Dance Theatre tonight

The University Dance Theatre presents its spring concert at 8:15 p.m. today in Memorial Hall. Seven dances will be offered, ranging from modern to ballet to a four-movement Renaissance arrangement.

Twenty-seven dancers from UNC and the Chapel Hill area began the Dance Theatre in the spring of last year. Tonight's performance, the Theatre's third, completes a successful second season.

Choreography will be presented by Dorothy Silver, formerly of the Martha Graham Dance Company, and M'Liss Dorrance, who has danced with Elliot Feld's National Ballet Company of Washington, D.C.

Patricia Jones and Pamela Davis, both of Chapel Hill, will also present choreography, as will UNC students Susan Jones, James Rainbow and Jamie Sims. Admission to the performance is free.

preliminary competition Tuesday, March 17, from a field of fifteen entrants.

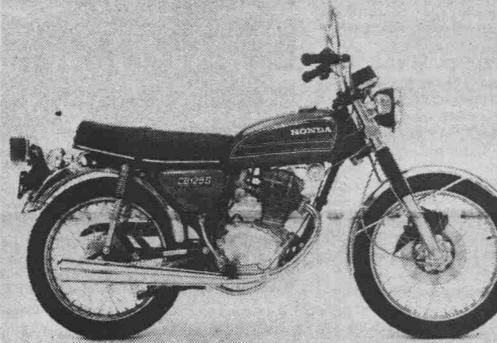

Established in 1878, the Mangum Medal is endowed by descendants of Willie P. Mangum, a U.S. Senator from North Carolina during the 1820's and 1830's. Since 1913, it has been presented under the auspices of the Dialectic and Philanthropic Societies.

Previous winners of the Medal include Gov. Charles B. Aycock, Rep. L.H. Fountain of North Carolina's Second Congressional District, Dr. John M. Schnorrenburg of the UNC Department of Art, and CBS newscaster Charles Kuralt.

Last year's recipient, Brent McKnight, is currently attending Oxford as a Rhodes Scholar.
