

No 'Moore' questions about UNC women's golf

by Mike Egan
Staff Writer

North Carolina sports quiz time: First, name the five starting players in the Tar Heel basketball lineup. Easy, right? How about the first-string backfield for the football team? Another slide. Now, name one of the top three players on the women's golf team. Stumped? Don't feel badly; you're not in the minority. But in a couple of years, you may well be.

The female golfers are on the way to casting off their veil of obscurity. Though the team has been together only two years, it boasts an undefeated regular season chart, and has won the state tournament, earning an invitation to the nationals in Tucson, Arizona.

One of the key players has been junior Mindy Moore. Moore, Sally Austin, and Kathy Sinopoli have dominated the top three spots on the girls' team all year. Mindy is steeped in golfing tradition. Her whole family are avid golfers. She started playing competitively in the Florida high schools, a hotbed for prep golf.

UNC Coach Pam Robinson has been pleased with Mindy's progress. "She is capable of the best golf on the team," notes Robinson. "Lately she and all the girls have been plagued by inconsistency, but they seem to be shaking that off."

Moore, an eight or nine handicapper, concurs. "My best golf was in the fall. I'm not unhappy with the way I've been playing, but in golf, you always feel you could do better."

The team is primed for the nationals. Coach Robinson is counting on a finish in the top ten, which would be quite an accomplishment for a second year team with no scholarship players.

"Playing in the national tournament will be the highlight of my career," says Mindy. "The team will gain invaluable experience from the trip."

Heels play Virginia

An invitation to ACC baseball

by John Dunlap
Staff Writer

Now that all the other Atlantic Coast Conference spring sports have taken their bows and the year is winding to a close, what better time to issue an invitation to America's most beloved and traditional sport—baseball.

A formal announcement might look something like this:

You, a Carolina fan, are most graciously invited to attend the final few days of ACC baseball. It is baseball week in the Triangle Area and your presence is expected. But first let us explain to you, dear reader, how to arrive at our baseball party.

The fun begins Thursday afternoon at Boshamer, Doak, and Coombs Stadiums in Chapel Hill, Raleigh, and Durham—respectively. At 2 p.m. the Carolina Tar Heels open their run for the roses against Virginia at N.C. State's Doak Stadium.

In the meantime, the Red Legions bring their abrasive forces to Blue Heaven and tangle with Duke's last place Blue Devils. The Wolfpack followers lost yet another in a long list of coin tosses and in doing so gave the first round bye to Clemson. It has been a long year for the folks in Raleigh.

Finally, at Coombs, the ancient, fenceless ballpark at Duke, Wake Forest led by the fleet-footed catcher Frank Mariani will tackle Maryland's surprising Terps.

Now, dear guests, the story of next baseball bashes gets a bit confusing.

Please pay attention now, party guests. The all-important semi-finals of the ACC Tournament will be played Friday, either in Chapel Hill or Raleigh. The games will take place in Chapel Hill only if Carolina wins against Virginia, or State loses against Duke. If both the Tar Heels and Wolfpack win, the final games will be here in Chapel Hill in front of the typically enthusiastic and well-versed fans of this area. But, if Carolina loses and State wins—the games will be played in Raleigh.

Try to remember that Thursday's losers are completely out in leftfield if they lose—eliminated. But starting Friday with the two semi-final games, the tournament becomes double-elimination. And your minds would boggle at the possibilities involved here.

Let's just leave it go with the realization that a team will have to play great ball to win the tournament.

And this is where you Tar Heel fans come in. This invitation is being given in the hopes that you will attend the festivities and that Carolina will play well enough to win Thursday against Virginia.

So with the help of good weather and good luck, the 1975 baseball season will draw to an exciting conclusion. As an invited guest to this bash you are reminded that this is a B.Y.O.L. party as we do not have enough Old Milwaukee for everyone. Finally, there is no need for a RSVP as we don't know what the hell is going on either.

Sports briefs: Intramural positions available for women

The Intramural Office is accepting applications and holding interviews this week for the paid positions for women residence hall managers and office staff.

One position is available for each dorm, with two open in Cobb and Ehringhaus and three in Morrison and James. Alexander and Connor dorms will be combined.

Managers which have been elected in their dorms should also fill out applications.

The office staff position available is supervisor of officials.

UNC woman golfer Mindy Moore tied Beth Daniels of Appalachian State for third place in the Virginia Invitational last weekend at Lynchburg, Va. Other UNC players entered were Jean Newton, Mindy Moore and Laura Stokes.

The Jayvee baseball team finished its season with an 11-9 mark by winning two of three games over the weekend.

The Tar Babies pushed across two runs in the ninth inning Sunday for a 6-5 win over N.C. State in the second game of a doubleheader. State won the opener 2-1 with an unearned run in the seventh.

Saturday the Jayvees blanked Campbell College 6-0 behind the two-hit pitching of Wayne Long. Last Thursday the squad dropped a 7-5 decision to Sandhills Community College on three unearned runs in the seventh inning.
