Cinema

On Campus
Arthur Rubenstein—Love of Life—An Academy Award winning documentary, this film combines the life and the music of the famed pianist through the use of old black-and-white clips, snippets of home movies, a current film of Rubenstein on a concert tour, and personal reminiscences from the maestro himself. (Alternative Cinema. Friday at 7 and 9:30 p.m. and Saturday at 2, 7 and 9:30 p.m. Admission $1.75.)
Take the Money and Run—Early

Woody Allen, and very funny, indeed. With Janet Margolin. (Union Free Flick. Friday at 6:30 and 9 p.m. in the Great Hall of the Union.)
Port of Shadows—Jean Gabin is a man trying to escape his past. Made in 1938 by the director-writer team of Marcel Carne and Jacques Prevert who later made the classic "Children of Paradise." (Union Free Flick.) Saturday at 6:30 and 9 p.m. in the Great Hall of the Union.)
The Black Windmill—A recent, overlooked spy story. Starring Michael Caine. (Union Free Flick. Sunday at 6:30 and 9 p.m. in the Great Hall of the Union.)

SAT scores declining

In these days of inflation, recession and devaluation, it is comforting to know something that is worth more today than yesterday, and your Scholastic Aptitude Test (SAT) score is. The SAT is used as a barometer for judging a high school student's suitability for college work. In 1974-75, high school graduates across the nation received more SAT scores below 400 and fewer scores at or above 600 than ever before. SAT verbal and mathematical score averages fell sharply below their 1973-74 levels.

 The 1974-75 drop in the national scores is not a dramatic change. It is part of a trend which finds SAT scores declining for the past 12 years, which increases the value of moderate and high scores.
 At UNC, the average scores of the entering freshman class for the past five years have declined from 541 verbal, 575 math in 1970-71 to 521 verbal, 561 math in 1974-75.
 One reason cited for the downward trend is increased use of telephone and television and a decline in letter writing and newspaper reading.
 Falling SAT scores are also blamed on declines in SAT test relevancy and teaching quality, on unstable learning atmospheres resulting from massive school desegregation, on a trend away from teaching "the basics" and on an increased number of "average students" taking the test.
