Report suggests code, race relations changes

by Mary Anne Rhyne
Staff Writer

A special committee of student-faculty-administrator conference issued recommendations for improvement in the Honor Code and race relations Monday.

The suggestions released by the conference's planning committee in a 13-page printed report grew out of a conference held Nov. 21-23 at Camp New Hope.

Copies of the report are being given to conference participants and will be made available to the public at a time and place to be announced today.

One of the major issues discussed by the conference was the Honor Code. The group suggested eliminating the Honor Code rule requiring students to turn in observed cheaters.

The report calls the practice "an unrealistic and counter-productive rule."

Student Body President Bill Bates said that the rule and the entire Honor Code will be discussed by the Campus Governing Council Rules and Judiciary Committee at its next meeting.

Race relations was another major discussion topic at the conference. Recommendations in this area include a "gauging of the nature of black related course content in the various departments", the feasibility of creating a Kenan professorship for a black historian and the establishment of a human relations course.

The conference also suggested forming a committee to meet regularly to discuss racial problems. It would consist of students and faculty of both races.

Bates said this is "close to being set up" too. A black-white committee has been established and is preparing to begin meeting weekly.

A third area of emphasis was academic reform, academic advising, departmental curricula, faculty-student discussions, establishment of a Teaching-Learning Center and a four-course load with varying course credit.

Bates said that a faculty lounge and more student faculty mixers are already under discussion and could possibly be realized this semester.

He also said "I am enthusiastic that most of what we discussed will become a reality." Bates said the report has some faults but they "can be taken care of in future conferences."

Dean of Student Affairs Donald A. Boulton said the conference produced "the kind of ideas so we can have action here." With this as the conference's goal, he said the success was beyond what he had expected.

Both Bates and Boulton expressed hopes for a future conference as a means of better communication between students, faculty and administrators.

Wilmington 10 surrender to begin serving terms

BURGAU—Nine men and a woman convicted of charges stemming from racial disorders at Wilmington in 1971 surrendered at the Pender County Courthouse Monday to begin serving their prison terms.

A small crowd of perhaps 30 supporters and family members accompanied the so-called "Wilmington 10" to the courthouse where they were convicted in June, 1972, on charges of burning a grocery store and conspiracy to assault firemen.

The Rev. Ben Chavis, a black activist who was sentenced to 29 to 34 years in prison as leader of the group, described the ten as "innocent victims" of "political persecution."

"We will continue our struggle behind bars," Chavis said.

The ten, nine black men and one white woman, were taken to Raleigh, accompanied by two U.S. marshals as well as state authorities.

The men will serve their sentences at Central Prison and the woman, Ann Sheppard, at the North Carolina Correctional Center for Women.

Vietnam forfeited U.S. aid

WASHINGTON—North Vietnam wiped out the possibility of American reconstruction aid by starting up the war again after the signing of the Paris peace accords, Presidential Press Secretary Ron Nessen said Monday.

Nessen said the mood of Congress and Hanoi's violations of the 1973 peace accords doomed any possibility of sending postwar aid to the Southeast Asia nation.

"Therefore the whole question became moot," said Nessen.

Four congressmen who recently returned from Hanoi said North Vietnamese leaders claim President Nixon in a January, 1973 memo to North Vietnamese Premier Pham Van Dong promised the United States would extend $3.25 billion in aid.

Nessen did not confirm or deny the existence of the memo. He told a White House briefing that it is not diplomatic practice to make public messages between governments.

Patty's fiance to testify

SAN FRANCISCO—The fiance Patricia Hearst ridiculed and scorned will testify at her bank robbery trial her defense attorney said Monday.

Steven Weed, whom Miss Hearst called a "sexist pig" and a "clown" while she was underground with the Symbionese Liberation Army, will be called to tell about the last time he saw her—during her kidnaping two years ago Wednesday.

"If the government doesn't call him, I will," said chief defense counsel F. Lee Bailey.

"He will be my number one witness." After Miss Hearst rejected Weed, whom she had planned to marry before the kidnaping, she professed her love for SLA member Willie Wolfe, who was killed in a shootout with police, and admitted she was living with another man, Steven Soliah, at the time of her arrest last September.

Governor discloses patronage power

by Ted Goldman
Staff Writer

Gov. James Holshouser publicly acknowledged for the first time Saturday a shift in federal patronage appointments power from Sen. Jesse Helms' office to his own.

Holshouser made his remarks at a press conference during the annual Piedmont (high school) Journalism workshop in Greensboro.

The patronage issue first surfaced last Thursday in the Greensboro Daily News, when Helms was quoted in an interview as saying that federal patronage had been taken away from him and given to Holshouser and Gene Anderson, an aide to Holshouser.

Usually, this power reverts to the governor only when there is no member of the President's political party in a state's congressional delegation. In all cases, however, the President has final appointment power.

Usually, only when there is no member of the President's party in a state's congressional delegation, does the patronage right revert to the governor or other senior party member.

Helms cited the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Committee (ASCS) nominations as a specific example in which his traditional patronage powers had been undermined, according to the Daily News report.

Although both Holshouser and Helms submitted a list of five ASCS board members to Ford, only Holshouser's nominees were selected.

Holshouser said that the President ought to be able to have appointees that support his viewpoint, adding that Helms is doing everything he can to see that Ford does not win the Republican nomination.

Clint Fuller, executive assistant to Helms said, "It's upsetting to have to get together with the other North Carolina Republican congressmen and make up a list of qualified board members and the find out that you have to call them back up and tell them no."

Fuller noted that Helms said he was not going "to get his nose of joint" over this.

Helms has often said that for every five people he appoints, he makes 500 enemies who don't get the job, Fuller added.

Phillip Belt, area manager for the U.S. Civil Service Commission, said there were probably only "a couple of thousand jobs" nationwide that relied on federal patronage, adding that the number in North Carolina is extremely small.

Belt said he saw "no reason for any basic change" in the present patronage system, explaining that it has the strength of a strong competitive career system, and yet, there are enough clearly labeled executive positions to be filled by the present state or federal executive so that he doesn't lose control.
