Diehl discusses ecology protection
by Laura Toler
Staff Writer

Private citizens have the obligation to see that laws intended to protect the environment are enforced, Drew Diehl, executive coordinator of the Conservation Council of North Carolina (CCNC), said Thursday in a speech before the Chapel Hill chapter of ECOS, Inc.

Although environmental legislation passed in the early 1970's "was supposed to open decision-making up to new areas that had never been considered before," it is only a formality unless people take violators to court, Diehl said.

Diehl cited the federal Clean Air Act, the Water Pollution Control Act and the National Environmental Policy Act (NEPA) as major legislative results of a "tremendous environmental fever (that) hit the land," beginning with Earth Day in 1970.

The enforcement provision of NEPA, which requires that a builder file an

Psychic

"I think one of the reasons my abilities are much more broad-sweeping than most psychics is that I have a curiosity as well as a skepticism about my ability.

"I think this is where many psychics make a tremendous mistake. They say, 'My ability is a gift from God, and I don't need to work at it or improve it any.'

Because Karen is a self-proclaimed psychic, people she meets often ask her to perform for them — identify a picture inside an opaque envelope, bend a fork, the way the Israeli psychic Uri Geller did on the Johnny Carson Show — some small act to prove her psychic ability.

"I'm not out to convince a person that I'm psychic. I don't care if they believe that I'm psychic or not. I advocate professionalism. When somebody asks me to do something BOOM, prove it my response is that I don't work cocktail parties. It's the same as when someone is introduced as being a plumber you don't drag him into the kitchen to install a washer."

Along with her insistence on professionalism, Karen says she feels an even stronger motivation to use her psychic powers in a way that will benefit people. She is contemptuous of fellow psychics who flaunt their abilities by performing psychical tricks, and she would like to establish a code of ethics for her profession.

"Uri Geller — the great Israeli fork-bender. If Geller had come out from the point of view of wanting to help people with his ability rather than bending forks — terrific. If he would apply his ability to, say, moving a piece of shrapnel into an operative position that was previously inoperative. That and being it, is really not doing anything to help mankind."

From much of what Karen says about her convictions of purpose and responsibility toward her gifts, one can't help recognizing an underlying sense of spirituality in what she says.

Karen is a reverend, but says it is just a legal technicality.

"There are only about seven states in the union in which you can practice clairvoyance without being a reverend. It's ridiculous. I had to become a reverend in order not to wind up going to jail for practicing clairvoyance.

"I'm a reverend of the Church of the Universal Light, or something like that — $15 to the west coast and (snapping her fingers) instant reverend. I don't use the title because I don't feel entitled to it."
