Klinger

Two Buck Preacher... For one dollar, UNC senior David Klinger has become an ordained minister in the Unitary Church of Conservation. According to the church, a non-profit organization licensed by the state of Florida, Rev. Klinger's ordination gives him the wedding, baptism, funeral and prison visitation rights of any minister.

He is entitled to clergy discounts at hotels, motels, airlines and apparel and grocery stores. His ordination also entitles him to use the title "brother" but he uses and prefers "reverend." Rev. Klinger, a former Daily Tar Heel news editor, became interested in the ministry through a newspaper advertisement. "It was one of those 'You Can Be a Minister' things," he said. "I thought, 'It's a fine occupation — you talk directly to God — so why not me?'"

Although it costs only a token contribution to be ordained, a $1 "Free Will Donation" secured Klinger his minister's credentials, a pocket license and a wall certificate suitable for framing.

For another dollar, Klinger can get a clergy parking sticker with which he hopes to receive minister's parking privileges all over campus from the UNC Traffic Office.

"While I'm on business I think I should be able to park anywhere on campus," the reverend said, adding, "I am constantly on business."

"I've also heard that you can become a deputy sheriff by mail, and I'm looking into that," he said. "The two professions are most complimentary."

Klinger said he is also considering starting a branch of the Unitary Church of Conservation in Chapel Hill. That he says, would only cost $20.

A Golden Find... A 479-year-old book was recently taken from the shelves of Wilson Library's Rare Book Collection for the first time since its purchase 14 years ago. Librarians thought it was just another rare book.

But then a library worker discovered 17 out of place pages bound in the back of the book, and suddenly it became an extraordinary rare book. What had been discovered was a segment of an original copy of the Golden Bull of 1487, possibly included in the volume only to fill its binding.

Approximately six original copies of the bull are still in existence, and before this recent discovery, there were none known to be in North America.

The Golden Bull, which outlined Germany's monarchical succession, was written when a power crisis developed during the reign of German Emperor Charles IV.

"It was a completely fortuitous discovery," said Paul Koda, Rare Book Collection curator. Because UNC has one of the best collection of work by printers of the late fifteenth century, Koda said the Golden Bull is rare not only for the object itself but for the discovery of the printer, whose presses ran only for a short time.

Though incomplete, the bull is printed in heavy gothic type on handmade paper in a means very similar to that used by Gutenberg, who invented movable type in 1455.

Mistaken Identity... There is one person who is going to be particularly glad to see Student Body President Bill Bates leave office — Bill Bates, manager of the Carolina Readers Theatre.

Bates, the theatre manager, was plagued with telephone calls for Bates, the president, particularly this fall during the DTH and BSM funding controversies.

"It was amusing at first, but it got annoying because some of the calls came at odd hours of the morning. Sometimes I left the phone off the hook," theater manager Bates said.

Most of the time, people would not recognize the voice and realize that they had the wrong number, he said. "But a lot of people called and congratulated me on the birth of my child." President Bates' wife Debbie gave birth to a child last December.

"I'll call places like the travel agency and they'll say, 'is this the Bill Bates,' and I'll say, yes, this is the Bill Bates, but not that Bill Bates," Bates, the theatre manager said.

"I'm using William now; I always have. But everybody still calls me Bill," he said.

Pop tops traded for dialysis

The UNC Recreation Club is now sponsoring a drive to buy time for kidney patients on dialysis machines by collecting pop tops from aluminum cans.

Reynold's Aluminum Company has offered to buy one minute on a kidney dialysis machine for each pop top the club turns in. Boxes have been placed next to soda machines in the Student Union and dorms. Collection may spread to local bars, drive chairperson Tim Harrison said.

Kidney patients awaiting transplants, usually children, need a $150 treatment on a dialysis machine every two or three days. Three hundred pop tops will buy a transplant candidate one treatment on the dialysis machine at the Medical College of Virginia.

In cases of extreme lack of funds, the state has a program to cover the remaining cost.
