Craige Gallery opens, gives space to local art

Last Sunday, while some art addicts gazed at the Old Masters in the Ackland, more than 100 others gazed at the Up-and-Coming in Craige Dorn.

A room that has been barren for years is now the home of the Craige Gallery. Its first exhibit, which opened Sunday, is a collection of neon works by undergraduates.

The Gallery is the result of several months of work by the Residence Directors of Craige and representatives from the Art Department. They saw the need for another outlet on campus for area artists other than the Student Union Gallery or the Ackland Museum.

"The Union is more like a lounge than a gallery," said Art professor Jerry Noe. "People are always in there drinking Cokes and eating sandwiches. You can't see the work for the tables and chairs."

The Ackland only has one undergraduate show a year and doesn't provide space for local artists. "You've got to give them an outlet," said Noe.

"When the Playmakers rehearse, they want to perform. Musicians want to give concerts, artists have to exhibit."

The Craige Gallery hopes to provide space for faculty, students, other schools or local artists. Since they are more informally managed than other galleries, they are willing to try new things.

"We'd like to try some photography or arts and crafts," said Bill Kenner, Asst. R.D. in Craige. "We're open to suggestions."

Improved security will be another advantage of the new gallery. Some students have had works stolen from exhibits in the Union. In Craige, volunteers will be on duty whenever the room is open.

They have not established regular hours but a key can be obtained at the Craige Desk for anyone interested. The gallery will be open on a trial basis three nights a week from 5-6 p.m. and for an hour on Sundays. If it proves to be popular the hours will be expanded.
