Three vie for spot on Commissioner's ballot

by Laura Byrd
Staff Writer

There are other Democrats besides Jimmy Carter hoping for election victories this fall. Three Hillsborough Democrats—Robert Haas, William Ray and Richard Whitted—are vying for the two vacant seats on the Orange County Board of Commissioners.

Haas is a band director in the Orange County school system and part-owner of Bob Haas Music Co. He was chairman of the Orange County School Board of which he was a member from 1968-1973.

William Ray served eight years as a county commissioner before being defeated in 1972 by Flo Garrett and Richard Whitted. Ray, who met defeat in 1974 when he ran for sheriff, is a beef cattle farmer and serves on the State Utilities Commission.

Whitted, the only incumbent, has served three and a half years as a county commissioner. The chairman of Orange County Council on Aging, Whitted is employed by Duke University. Haas, who is not accepting contributions for his campaign, describes himself as a moderate with liberal leanings.

"I want to continue the line of progress of the Orange County Commissioners. They've made more progress in the past four or five years than ever before," he said.

Haas feels it is the wrong time to cut back on services Orange County offers its citizens. "I don't know of any right time to cut back on human services," he said, and added, "I am an educator and I will fight for tax dollars for education."

Haas' opponent Ray said he would campaign on his former record and on the platform of fiscal responsibility. "A dollar worth (of services) for a dollar spent," said the State Utilities Commissioner.

Ray said he wasn't in favor of cutting back all of the county's programs, but feels that a closer look needs to be taken at the existing programs.

Whitted wants the emphasis on human services continued. "Two of my opponents think the county is doing too much," he said.

He wants to continue the programs while at the same time, maintaining the fiscal integrity of the county.

"I feel good about the last four years and I want to help maintain the momentum and the response in the county," Whitted said.

Suit

Smith is also asking the court to award her sums of $500,000 and $125,000 for "discrimination" and for loss of "independent income" as a lecturer, respectively.

Beyond the demands for monetary recompense, Smith is requesting that she be reappointed to another three-year term with the Religion Department.

She is also requesting two years off, a length of time she says she had to spend conducting research in an effort to maintain her position with the University.

Besides President Friday and Chancellor Taylor, Charles Long, Kenan Professor of Religion, is also named in the suit.

University officials have a 20-day time period in which to answer the charges filed by Mary Carroll Smith, who maintains that the UNC Grievances Committee recommended her reappointment, which was subsequently refused by Taylor.
