Carrboro voters to decide street improvements bond

by Chip Pearsall
Staff Writer

Carrboro voters will go to the polls Tuesday, Nov. 30, to decide whether the town government will issue a bond providing $1 million for street improvements.

Carrboro Alderman Robert Drakeford said Sunday that student vote in the bond election will be a major factor.

Repairs to 30 to 35 Carrboro streets could begin by February or March, 1977 if the bond election passes.

Seventy per cent of Carrboro's population consists of students.

"Student apathy on this could kill the bond decision," Drakeford said. "The street improvements are vitally needed by the town."

Drakeford said Sunday that most streets in Carrboro are substandard.

"Some streets will be repaved, and others will be completely rebuilt with curbing and guttering if the bond election passes," Drakeford said.

"In years past, there have not been sufficient funds for building and maintaining streets. As a result, many of our streets need improvement."

Drakeford said that the condition of the streets in Carrboro was a major factor in the defeat of the bond referendum last year.

Drakeford said that if the bond referendum passes, every homeowner in Carrboro will have the option of voting whether or not to pave his street. The improvements will be made to streets if 51 per cent of property owners with frontage on the street vote for improvements.

The bond will be financed by taxes on the basis of street front property. Drakeford said that a rate of up to $11 per foot of property fronting the street will be charged to owners for the improvements.

The charges assessed to property owners represent approximately 70 per cent of the cost of the bond. State and city revenues will finance the remaining 30 per cent. "Property owners assessed for street improvements will have from five to eight years to pay for the improvements with an interest rate of six per cent," Drakeford said.

He said that the additional property value caused by street improvements would help compensate for the initial expenditure through future taxes.

"The Carrboro Board of Aldermen feels that this is the only way that we can realistically go in getting our streets repaired," Drakeford said. The board voted unanimously to hold the street bond election.

The board has held meetings during the past two weeks to hear citizens' views on the street bond election. Some Carrboro residents have questioned the assessment method of financing the bond.

Don Peninger, a former town board member, said that he thinks the board and town employees should examine alternate methods of funding. He suggested revenue sharing funds provided by the federal government.

"I'm a little worried about the assessment method that would be employed by the town if the bond passes as it stands now," Peninger said.

"I know a lot of municipal governments use the assessment method, but there are elderly people on fixed incomes in Carrboro that might be adversely affected if this particular method is used. I've said so at the two meetings that have been held."

Lifeline, Fair Share options

Assembly to hear electricity pricing plans

by Russell Gardner
Staff Writer

An alternative to the pricing structure now used by North Carolina utilities companies will be introduced before the state legislature in early 1977 by Rep. Lora Talley, Democrat of Fayetteville.

Under the present system, business and industry pay a lower utility rate than residential customers.

The first of these rate reforms, known as Lifeline, would guarantee that energy for the basic necessities of heating, cooking and lighting will be available at a low fixed cost to all residential customers.

Carolina Action, a state consumer group sponsoring the legislation, is proposing that all residential users, regardless of how much electricity they use, pay $10 a month for the first 500 kilowatt hours (KWH) used or 2 cents per KWH.

The second of these rate reforms, known as Fair Share, would guarantee that residential, business and industrial customers pay the same rate per KWH.

According to a pamphlet issued by Carolina Action, residential electricity customers in North Carolina now pay an average rate of 3 cents per KWH, as compared to 2.7 cents per KWH for commercial customers and 2 cents per KWH for industrial customers.

Under the proposed Fair Share rates, everyone would pay 2.5 cents per KWH after the first 500 KWH's.

The People's Alliance, a statewide organization involved in a number of work place/community issues, sponsored a public meeting in Chapel Hill last week with state legislators to discuss utility rate reform. Approximately 80 local residents attended, and a majority endorsed the Lifeline and Fair Share proposals.

In addition, local residents were informed that electricity rates will skyrocket in the Chapel Hill area next year when Duke Power Co. takes over the area's electric system.

The UNC Board of Trustees voted in spring of 1976 to sell the University-owned electric system to Duke Power for $15 million. The electric system serves Chapel Hill, Carrboro and parts of Orange Co.

According to statistics issued by the People's Alliance, an all-electric residence (which pays the lowest rate per KWH, pays $22.97 for 1000 KWH's under the UNC system and $33.64 under the Duke Power system.

A residence without electric water or space heating (which pays the highest rate per KWH) pays $25.89 for 1000 KWH's under the UNC system and $40.11 under the Duke Power system.

However, UNC Utilities Director Grey Culbreth warned that the People's Alliance figures may be inaccurate because they are computed without regard to fuel adjustment rates. Duke Power has a lower fuel adjustment rate than UNC, and consequently the gap between Duke Power and UNC's rates would be smaller.

Culbreth estimated the average rate increase will be approximately 15 per cent when Duke Power takes over the system.

The People's Alliance is also concerned with the consistency with which Duke Power Co. has been granted rate increases by the State Utilities Commission.

Ted Outwater, a spokesperson for the People's Alliance, said Duke Power has been granted 82.6 per cent of their requested rate increases since 1971.

Outwater also said that industrial use of Duke Power greatly outnumbers residential use. For example, in 1975 Duke Power sold 16.7 million KWH's of electricity for industrial use compared with 10.8 million KWH's for residential use.
