

Sunlight banks sharply off the shoulder of Silent Sam, the McCorkle Place statue of a Confederate soldier. The monument memorializes the 321 alumni of the University who died in the War Between the States, as well as the 1,062 who entered the Confederate Army. The sun has risen more than 23,000 times over Silent Sam, who is in full battle uniform but lacks a cartridge box.

The following faculty members will be on leaves of absence during the upcoming year: Christopher Armitage, associate professor of English, from Jan. 9 to May 15, 1977; Stephen B. Baxter, Kenan Professor of history, from Aug. 17, 1977 to May 14, 1978; Kenneth I. Gross, associate professor of mathematics, from Jan. 9 to May 15, 1977; Ross D. The School of Business Administration has received a gift of $16,667 in endowment funds from North Carolina National Bank (NCNB). The gift is part of a $100,000 pledge by NCNB to the Business School's Program for the '70s endowment campaign.

He is offering a graduate-undergraduate lecture course in 20th-century-British and American literature and a graduate seminar in the writings of William Faulkner. An essay on "T.S. Eliot, Anthropologist and Primitive," by William Harmon, associate professor and chairperson of the department of English, appears in the December issue of The American Anthropologist. Harmon demonstrates the complex uses of cultural anthropological research that the poet Eliot made in his major work.

Washington Irving's Astoria, edited by Richard D. Rust of the English department, has just been brought out by Twayne Publishers of Boston, Mass., as the first in their series, The Complete Works of Washington Irving. "Astoria, or Anecdotes of an Enterprise beyond the Rocky Mountains" is a history of John Jacob Astor's attempt to found a fur trading empire in the drainage area of the Columbia River in the years 1810-13.

Moss

Other ideas Moss said he will work toward include the instituting of a student news bureau for campus organizations, a campus flea market and a fall break.

Moss recognized many limitations in the office of Student Body president, such as limited time, money and scope of responsibilities delegated by the administration. Yet, he said the office's potential outweighs its limitations.

"There are many unexplored avenues," he said. Moss said there were several reasons affecting his decision to enter the race.

"To say that ego had nothing to do with it would be patently ludicrous," he said. He also attributed his motivation to a desire to see a real change in SG and to a confidence in his abilities to bring such a change.

Lassiter

Lassiter also supports increased appropriations to club sports. He admitted that this and other projects would demand additional funds, and he called for a student fee increase.

Lassiter denied the existence of limitations on the office of Student Body president, blaming past failures on the limited approach of past presidents and his current opponents.

"I don't think there are any limitations if the Student Body president can inspire and attract talented people," he said.

He said he is running for the office because of an obligation to the University to make it a better place.

"I'm not trying to get into law school; I want to go to med school," he said, denying selfish motivations.

Reservoir ruckus resumes

Studies have been reactivated to consider increasing the capacity of University Lake to supplement Chapel Hill's water supply, even though Cane Creek was chosen by the Orange Water and Sewer Authority (OWASA) as the site for construction of a secondary water source.

"OWASA is reevaluating its choice of Cane Creek as a (secondary water) site. It's reevaluating the University Lake data and updating it, and at the same time it's proceeding with its work on Cane Creek as rapidly as various factors permit," William Billingsley, OWASA director, said.

He explained the OWASA is reactivating the University Lake studies at the request of the Cane Creek Conservation Authority (CCCA), a group of the area's residents opposed to the Cane Creek project.

Cane Creek was designated by the OWASA last September as the most desirable site for construction of the area's secondary water supply as the result of studies begun in 1968 by UNC when Chapel Hill had a water shortage similar to the one this fall. University Lake was included in the studies.

The studies were suspended in 1971 when the University agreed to sell its utilities. OWASA was created in June 1976 to buy the utilities and asked UNC to reactivate its study on Cane Creek.

The utilities were scheduled to be sold Jan. 6, but because of delays in arranging the sale of $4.75 million in revenue bonds, the sale was postponed until Feb. 15.

According to Wayne Abernathy, one of two Graham attorneys contracted by the CCCA to study both the impact the proposed dam and reservoir would have on the Cane Creek area and the alternatives to Cane Creek, University Lake's dam by 22 feet would result in a potential water supply equivalent to that which would be provided by the Cane Creek project.

However, Abernathy conceded that even though alternatives to Cane Creek are being considered, "if, on the basis of cost and water acquisition Cane Creek is (determined by OWASA) as the best site, then that's what has to be done."

In an attempt to resolve the opposition by the area's residents that the Cane Creek project has raised, representatives from OWASA, the Orange County Board of Commissioners and the CCCA have formed a joint task force.

"We have been meeting and discussing mutual problems relating to Cane Creek and the need for a water supply (for Chapel Hill). Hopefully we will come to a solution to these problems acceptable to both parties," Billingsley, a member, said.

Billingsley said that the field survey work will continue on Cane Creek. Although most of the residents have allowed the surveyors on their lands, he said, OWASA, by state statute, has the right to eminent domain (condemnation) of any land designated as necessary for construction of the project.

OWASA is also preparing environmental impact reports on both Cane Creek and University Lake which must be submitted to the Army Corps of Engineers before any construction can begin. No construction date has been set, Billingsley said.
