Kuralt

cables and cameras and a refrigerator for my beer." Kuralt said in the slow, deep measured tones of a voice familiar to television viewers.

But for Kuralt, the visit to Chapel Hill was personal as well as professional. Before he joined CBS News almost 20 years ago, Kuralt, a native of Charlotte, went to school at UNC and got his start as a staff writer and later editor of the Daily Tar Heel.

Kuralt recalled that he got his degree later than most students. "The main reason I didn't get my degree on time at UNC was because I was editor of the Daily Tar Heel in lieu of going to class," he said.

Kuralt also had problems passing the required swimming test. "It is true that I had to repeat swimming. But I was a hell of an intramural third baseman," he said.

For one of his years at UNC Kuralt lived in Battle Hall, which was then a dormitory, in a room which was once occupied by another famous Carolina alumnus, Tom Wolfe.

Wolfe was a favorite author on campus when Kuralt was a student here. "One has to read Wolfe at about 16 to get the full effect," he said.

Kuralt's relatives still live in North Carolina. His parents have now retired and moved from Charlotte to Kitty Hawk, and his brother Wallace owns the Intimate Bookshop and still lives in Carrboro.

"He did what all of us always wanted to do—stay in Chapel Hill," Kuralt said.
